The Opening Section is dedicated to highlighting certain events and people that have made the school year memorable and that truly exemplify the Lasallian heart and spirit.

The theme this year, Out of the Blue & Into the Gold, recognizes experiences that may have come as a surprise, whether positive or negative, but that the La Salle community has acted upon and made its own.

May these stories introduce you to the book as a whole and successfully illustrate the passion that this university has.

Vincent Kling

Imagine this…It's a quiet, beautiful Spring evening on La Salle's campus, the kind of evening that signals a new beginning for many. As you look at Holroyd Hall, you notice a Professor talking quietly to a group of young men. Later that same evening, the same professor is sitting in the Union lobby with the same students, with a rapt attention that is often unseen in a formal classroom setting. Is this an Admissions tour? Is this a class meeting outside of the four walls of an academic building?

Actually, it's Dr. Vincent Kling, or Vince, as he easily allows, talking with new pledges to Sigma Phi Lambda, and he's discussing the legacy of the fraternity with them, extorting them to understand not just the value of the present, but also the need to remember such greats as Dr. Roland Holroyd and Dan Rodden. What Vince Kling won't allow, though, is for anyone to consider him on that "great" side of the equation. Students in his English classes, however, beg to differ.

One student, an experienced adult learner, chose Dr. Kling's English class as her last undergraduate class, largely because she had heard from other students what a wonderful experience awaited her. "From the first class to the last, I have to say that Vince never conducted class without being engaged with us, his students. His enthusiasm for the topics in our literature class was infectious. Everyone participated in his "circle" class, whether because they had volunteered their participation or because Vince drew them in. After taking this class with Vince, I realized how much some of my other teachers would benefit from observing and adopting some of his teaching style. Vince is a very special teacher, he reached his students in a very special way, and everyone is better for it."

Dr. Vincent Kling is part of the fabric of our Lasallian community. From the time he attended as an undergraduate student himself, he's been identified as a special person. He was awarded the Woodrow Wilson Fellowship upon graduation in 1968 – an achievement made even more remarkable for this maxima cum laude graduate, because he attended in the Evening Division. He's gone on to win many more awards and acknowledgements. There are so many: the Lindback Distinguished Teaching Award in 1984, a Fulbright Fellowship to the University of Vienna in 1997, an invitation to be a guest Professor at the same University for the summer of 2003. He's a specialist in the works of 20th century Austrian novelist Heimito von Doderer, which is evidenced by the publication of several monographs on this topic. In addition to presenting countless articles, presentations, and essays on von Doderer and other contemporary authors, Dr. Kling was also one of the original University participants in the Lasallian Leadership Institute.

So, it's easy to see why Dr. Vincent Kling is a valued member of this Lasallian community. But why do the students choose to dedicate the yearbook to him this year? Well, it's because when speaking with Vince, and asking about his greatest accomplishment, he's not very likely to tell you about all of the awards and publications. He's likely to tell you that he hopes that he's had an effect on just one student. He might tell you about the discussions he has had with fraternity pledges, or the students who visit his office, or with whom he shares a soda on a quad bench or in the Food Court.

Dr. Kling, we can tell you that you've impacted countless students, and in just the same way that your La Salle education gave you firm footing and confidence, you've done the same for many, many students. You've given students challenge, hope, and a desire to leave La Salle and our world a better place than we found it. On behalf of all of those students, we thank you, and are proud to dedicate this publication to you.

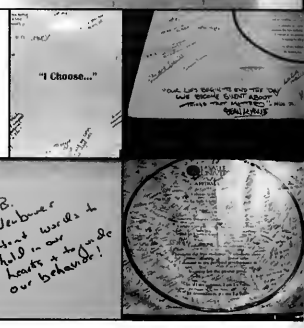
Together We Are



There is a new buzz around campus and it isn't just about a new dining hall and new dorms. The Division of Student Affairs (DSA) in a partnership with the Student Government Association (SGA), have come up with an Affirmation to define what it means to be a student member of the La Salle community.

"The Affirmation is the product of several months discussion among members of the Division of Student Affairs and a number of our student leaders, most notably the representatives elected to both the 2004-2005 and 2005-2006 rosters of our Student Government Association," said Dean of Students Joseph Cicala.

The Affirmation is intended to sum up the Lasallian mission in a simple but powerful and visible way. Students are now expected to live up to the ideals set forth by the Affirmation.

"Our goal was to create a statement that really captures what it means to be a member of this La Salle University community," Cicala said.

The Affirmation has already been used in several ways. It has been the theme of Day One and Opening Weekend activities. Many faculty members around campus are planning to include the Affirmation in their respective departments. The School of Nursing's faculty and staff have already made plans to include it in several of their publications.

Throughout this process the internet has played a major roll in the communication of the Affirmation.

"I'm sure that working with Mike Nielsen, Information Associate in DSA, we will continue to bring the Affirmation to the forefront by utilizing the portal as a vehicle," James Sell, director of Portal Communications said.

"However, more indirectly, I think the components of the Affirmation permeate through the portal in other less obvious ways. For example, if you were to review the La Salle News Bytes archives in the portal, where Lasallian achievements are posted, one can see how members of the community have modeled some of the values associated with the Affirmation. Also, in terms of building community, I believe the portal is an online extension or an enhancement of Lasallian face-to-face interactions and involvement in the community," Sell said.

The Affirmation started out as a goal set forth by Dean Cicala. A group comprised of Associate Dean of Students, Allen Wendell; Assistant Dean of Students, Anna Allen; Direct of Health Services Lane Neubauer, Associate Director of Community Development, Mark Badstubner; Coordinator for off campus and commuter students, Ryan Holmes and Resident Coordinator, Ben Cramer came up with the initial groundwork of The Affirmation.

"I think that the entire SGA is thrilled about the affirmation," SGA president Ricardo Johnson said. "The Affirmation is what La Salle represents."

Johnson pointed out that class of 2005 graduate, Leo Schwartz, recommended the final lines of the Affirmation. This was another step in the highly successful "I am La Salle" campaign started last year.

"Based upon the ways in which people have responded to and embraced the Affirmation, I think we are really on to something," Cicala said.

Shining Star

Stars were shining inside and out of the Pyramid Club on [illegible] Salle's Communication Department held its annual Awards [illegible] of the Shining Stars, at the club, which is located on the 52nd floor [illegible] city's third tallest building, the Center City Mellon Bank Center. Faculty and alumni gathered to honor this year's winner, along with the first recipient of the Bro. Gerry Molyneaux Scholarship. The event featured dinner, drinks, dancing and a live and silent auction.

Celebrated actor Peter Boyle was awarded the Shining Star Award, which he can now place next to his Emmy Award. Past Shining Stars include NBC 10 News Anchor Renee Chenault-Fattah and President/CEO of the Associated Press Tom Curley.

"The Shining Star Award is given to a professional with an outstanding career in communication and also a record of service to the community, and Peter certainly meets those standards," Molyneaux said.

Molyneaux introduced Boyle with an anecdote about a recent incident that occurred when the two were in a parking lot together. Someone approached Boyle and asked him if anyone ever told him that he looked like Peter Boyle. He responded by saying, "All my life."

Boyle began his acceptance speech by saying, "Holy crap!" He spoke about the need for good communicators and said that "sometimes it's hard to accept it when people love you."

Boyle was quiet during the ceremony, which included the showing of a video produced by Communication Professors Sid MacLeod and Bill Wine. The video chronicled Boyle's career with clips from The Candidate, The In Crowd, Joe, Malcolm X, Taxi Driver, Young Frankenstein, Monster's Ball, Honeymoon in Vegas, Everybody Loves Raymond and an appearance on Monday Night Football. President Bro. Michael McGinniss said that Boyle "has a strong sense of social justice" and that he is a "true Lasallian" before presenting him with the Shining Star Award.

Senior communication major Michelle Bauer was the other "star" of the night. Co-chair of the Communication Advisory Board and alum from the first class of communication majors at La Salle, Paul Perrello, presented Bauer with the first Bro. Gerry Molyneaux Scholarship. The Advisory Board established the private scholarship, named in honor of the founder of the Communication Department. The Board began raising funds for the scholarship at the Department's 25th Anniversary Celebration in 2003 and has since raised $50,000.

Bauer was one of four finalists nominated from among the common scholarship applications for the Bro. Gerry scholarship. The nominees completed a second application specifically for the Bro. Gerry scholarship, which asked about the candidates' activities, career goals and philanthropic interests. They were also required to submit a faculty recommendation, essay, resumé and complete an interview with a panel of four alumni.

Chair of the Communication Department Dr. Lynne Texter said, "Our first scholarship winner, Michelle Bauer, impressed the scholarship committee with not only her academic excellence and work experience, but also with her motivation, community service, poise and humility. Michelle is an excellent choice as the first recipient and she has set a high standard for all future communication majors."

For 13 La Salle students and two faculty advisers, winter break was anything but ordinary. These 15 were part of Project Mapendo, a service trip and travel experience that led them to Tanzania, Africa. The group left for Tanzania on Dec. 27 and returned on Jan. 14. While there, they visited churches, the University of Dar Es Salaam, an orphanage and secondary schools. The group's focus was to interact with students from the secondary schools and help them improve their conversational English. This proved to be very important for the children because they are taught in only English and are expected to read, write and participate using it as well.

"The problem is most of the children are not comfortable with the language and this, in turn, affects their performance in school," student coordinator Bonnie O'Neill said.

To combat this problem, each group member worked with two or three students individually.

"We visited their homes, walked around the city with them, learned their culture and introduced them to our own," student coordinator Katie Leary said. "Most importantly, though, we broke the barriers of language."

Plans for Project Mapendo began two-and-a-half years ago. University Ministry and Service (UMAS) came in contact with Maryknoll Missionaries, who was willing and able to host the service trip. Then, the process of preparing for the trip officially began.

In March 2005, 13 students and two adult supervisors were chosen to participate. Associate Director of University Ministry and Service, Louise Giugliano, was one of the advisers chosen, along with Jean DiSabitino. Bonnie O'Neill and Katie Leary were both named student coordinators, while Kate Muller, Michael Farrell, Michael Lefthand, Nicole Wilson, Joanne Brennan, Amie Kotalic, Nancy Hecker, Beth Myers-Edwards, Liz Moreno, Jen Abraczinkskas and Andrea Stein made up the rest of the "troupe."

Once the group was assembled, they met once a week to work on fund-raising, reflection and education to prepare for the trip.

Each member was emotionally moved during their time in Tanzania, and the relationships they made reflected the true spirit of Africa.

For junior Andrea Stein, a special education major, this was her first trip outside of the United States. Though she was afraid at first, she said that the trip exceeded her expectations so much that she hopes to go back and teach those in need of special education. Junior Michael Farrell shared similar thoughts. He is an education major and said that this was the best travel experience at La Salle.

"I thought that it was going to be awkward at first, but getting a connection came easy because the people are so open, so comfortable," Farrell said.

Senior Michael Lefthand shared a special connection to the trip. His uncle, Mike Snyder, serves for the Maryknoll Missionaries, and was another influence in getting the trip organized. "Growing up I heard stories about Africa because my uncle was living there at the time, so when this opportunity arose, it seemed too good to pass up," Lefthand said.

Like the rest of the group, Lefthand didn't know what to expect from the trip.

"My primary objective was to maintain a focus on the mission, to make as much of a difference as possible and to enjoy the relationships that were offered," he said. "In the end, it was real to see how happy the people were to simply be alive. They're so impoverished that all they have is their life and the lives of those around them."

As of now, the group is evaluating the trip and possibly making plans for a second.

"I think it is safe to say that Africa will be a part of each of us for the rest of our lives," O'Neill said. "A lesson of love and life was learned and, hopefully, this can be passed from each of us to the rest of the La Salle community over time."

They take the sand that they used and destroy it. They take the sand and pour it into a body of flowing water, because the idea is that it will be carried to the world and to nature and so on.

~ Dr. Cornelia Tsakiridou, Director of the Diplomat-in-Residence Program

The Tibetan word for mandala, "kilkhor," means the "center of the circle with exterior walls and surrounding environment." Each grain of sand is charged with the blessings of the ritual process, so the entire sand mandala embodies a vast store of spiritual energy.

The Beauty of Impermanence

If you have walked through the Union or visited the Art Museum during the opening days of the school year, then you most likely have seen the friendly faces of many Tibetan monks. They are from the Drepung Gomang Monastery in India, and have come to La Salle to present their sacred works of art, as well as to share stories of their culture. The University's Diplomat-in-Residence Program and Art Museum hosted the Tibetan monks, and their visit had been sponsored by the Provost.

Dr. Cornelia A. Tsakiridou, an Associate Professor of Philosophy and the Diplomat-in-Residence Director, explained the purpose of the program.

"It is a program that is intended to bring to La Salle students distinguished diplomats and government officials from other countries and the U.S. and to inform students on current world affairs," she said.

This was the first time that the program did a large event in collaboration with the Art Museum. Tsakiridou actually found out that the Tibetan monks were coming through friends in the Tibetan Buddhist Community.

"We had the option of hosting the monks and showing their work. Many universities do not have art museums or art galleries where they can show the work. We, however, have the advantage of having one. The Director of the Art Museum, Dr. Madeleine Viljoen, was very enthusiastic about it, so it just worked... it's worked very well," said Tsakiridou.

Some of the monks were born with natural artistic talent, but they also have had training at the monastery. The translator for the Tibetan monks, Tenzin Dolma, came from an artistic family in Canada and, thus, had long been interested in art.

"I left home and was just traveling and ended up in Tibet and then in India after that. I was asked to teach in the monastery for six months and ended up staying there for eight years instead," Dolma said.

The monks are actually refugees who have found a home in the monastery. It is there that they have the freedom to study Buddhism and their culture. During the monks' two week visit, they have resided with an older monk living in Northeast Philadelphia. While at La Salle, there have been lectures, concerts and opportunities for the community to view their works of art. There was, an exhibition of religious paintings, or thankga, and also the creation of a sand mandala.

"The thankga are sacred images so you cannot put them on the floor. There is a certain reverence that has to be shown to them," Tsakiridou said.

"Mandala" is a Sanskrit word, which means cosmogram or "world in harmony." The sand mandala that the monks have been creating at La Salle is one of healing. Four monks worked on the piece in the Art Museum for about seven to eight hours a day. It is constructed from dyed sand particles, and there is a ritual for dismantling it.

"They will take the sand that they used and destroy it. They take the sand and pour it into a body of flowing water, because the idea is that it will be carried to the world and to nature and so on. For this, most likely, we are going to use the only body of natural water that we have, which is the little creek by the Japanese Tea House," Tsakiridou said.

As Viljoen said, the monks' art is "about impermanence. It's made with sand and it's not about keeping it." This is not necessarily what many students are used to, considering that the Art Mseum is basically about preservation, so it enabled students to look at art and culture in a new way. La Salle had been the first University that the Tibetan monks have visited in the United States and they will later be travelling to Connecticut, New Hampshire and New Jersey. The monks' visit has been beneficial for the University because it has helped spread a cultural awareness around the campus through faculty, staff and students.

Circle of Solidarity

For better or worse, La Salle University is a microcosm of the world in which we live. In our Lasallian culture, we aspire to higher standards than what is acceptable in other environments. But like many strong, positive cultures, we are occasionally disappointed by the actions of a few, often so cowardly as to be invisible, individuals. Such was the case in one of our residence halls this year, when a staff member and his family became the target of racial harassment. While all official measures were taken to notify the community about this harassment, and while investigations continued, it did not go unnoticed by many that this staff member, his family, and others were suffering significant discomfort and pain because of someone else's actions.

So, on a cold, but very sunny free period afternoon, our community did what it does so very well. With only 24 hours notice, word spread around campus to encourage us to join together in a Circle of Solidarity…a visible sign of support for those targeted, and a visible sign by this community to the cowardly, that silence is not an option here when a wrong has been committed. Over 250 student, staff, and faculty quietly, but very deliberately joined hands around the building where the slurs were written, and for fifteen minutes or so, passed affirming messages "down the line" to one another about our firm belief, as a community, that we will not accept the intolerance of a few, that we stand in celebration of our many cultures, and that we support those who have been injured by the ignorance of the few.

In association, we are La Salle.

Campus to Career - Career Services can H

From your new, "Life after La Salle" vantage point, the best news about Career Services is that you can continue to use many of our services free of charge - how often do you hear that?

Many exciting things happened at Career Services in 2005-2006! In addition to hosting 3 on-campus job fairs, which brought over 200 employers to campus, Career Services hosted or participated in a number of networking events, offered a meal to remember at Dinner with the Deans and managed an active on-campus recruiting program which allowed a wide range of companies to recruit students for both full-time postgraduate opportunities as well as internships and co-ops.

Now that you have joined the ranks of La Salle's alumni, what might be of the greatest interest to you is the number of employers who post opportunities on eXplorenet - Career Services' on-line database of job openings and employers. eXplorenet gives La Salle students and alumni 24/7 access to thousands of employers and jobs, plus contact information on hundreds of experienced alumni involved with our alumni networking and mentoring program. In addition, eXplorenet allows you to post your resume on-line so that we can refer it to employers seeking qualified candidates.

Career Services offers these additional resources for alumni:

Career Counseling, essential if you aren't sure what your next step should be, provides the opportunity to formulate or discuss educational plans and vocational goals on a one-on-one basis with a career counselor. Career planning is an organized, individual process revolving around the world-of-work and its relationship to one's total life. The Career Services staff is available to help clarify career goals by working with individuals to complete an objective self-assessment, define strengths and goals, and establish how to apply them to the working world.

Resume and Cover Letter critiques will help you prepare the best documents for introducing yourself to employers and standing out from the crowd.

On-Campus Recruiting allows you to interview with employers coming to campus seeking qualified candidates. Hundreds of seniors participated in this program and this may still be an option for recent grads.

Explorer Network, our network of alumni mentors you can access through eXplorenet, is a great way to get information on career options, industries of interest or specific companies. Some alums may also be willing to give resume or cover letter critiques.

Job postings are sent to Career Services on a daily basis and posted to eXplorenet . All openings are posted on-line through our eXplorenet system.

Our Career Resource Library includes various job search directories, business lists, graduate school guides and catalogs, company literature, as well as resume and cover letter writing guides; all designed to help you prepare for your job search and identify potential employers or grad schools. If you're looking for a great on-line resource of career information, we also subscribe to The Vault which is accessible through the mylasalle portal.

On-Campus Job Fairs include the Nursing and Health Sciences Job Fair and Career Expo. Alumni are invited and encouraged to attend these events to discuss current and future openings as well as network with the recruiters (many of whom are La Salle alumni). The Career Expo, which attracts a wide range of employers looking for candidates for full-time openings, has been moved to the Fall semester.

Whatever direction you are taking in the future, the Career Services office is available to help you make connections, both on and off-line!

La Salle's Homecoming King and Queen were crowned during the game's halftime on Saturday, Oct. 29. The winners were seniors Dino Dedic and Bonnie O'Neill. After the buzzer signaling halftime sounded, the crowd was in good spirits since La Salle had a seven-point lead over opponents Kean University.

The nominees lined up across the football field and Assistant Dean Anna Melnyk Allen announced the winners to a cheering crowd of students and alumni, despite technical difficulties presented by the wireless microphone.

Every year, all members of the La Salle community are invited to nominate any senior they believe deserves the title King or Queen.

Each nominee is approved by the homecoming committee and is carefully reviewed by a board of La Salle faculty and staff. The winners are chosen based on their academic achievement, contributions to La Salle and demonstration of Lasallian values. After reviewing a list of nominees, the committee narrowed the list to about five male and five female nominees.

Homecoming

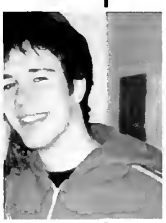
Dedic said that being selected was a "nice recognition of my involvement at La Salle." Dedic was a Resident Assistant for two years and was involved with Project Appalachia. Dedic said that he loves attending La Salle, and that he was especially honored to share his title with, "one of my best friends, Bonnie."
O'Neill is also an active La Salle senior who was involved with Project Mapendo, a new organization that traveled to Africa over winter break.

The Explorers' Recap

- First touchdown - Sophomore WR Bernie Cevis on a 24-yard touchdown pass, tying the game at 7.
- Found junior WR Lou Russo along the sideline for a 39-yard reception setting up junior RB Josh Brumfield's 2-yard touchdown run putting the Explorers out front 14-7.
- With just 26 seconds left in the quarter Roque connected with WR Jarred Crowley from 16 yards out tying the score once again.
- A fumble on the ensuing kickoff by junior RB Kevin Sullivan allowed Kean to take the lead just under two minutes into the second quarter when RB Travell Robinson scored from a yard out, giving Kean the 21-14 lead.
- The defense got the team back into it when LB Nick Sipes recovered a fumble. Feeding off the defense, Jump threw a shovel pass to Sullivan (6 catches, 81 yards, 2TD), who ran it for a 24-yard touchdown, knotting the game at 21.
- Thanks to a defensive standstill led by sophomore DE J.J. Luney and senior DE Nate Moss with 30 seconds left in the half, the Explorers took a 28-21 lead into halftime.
- Brumfield (67 yards, 2TD) struck again with an exciting 31-yard touchdown run that put La Salle up 34-21.
- Kean coach Charlie Cocuzza decided to go for the win instead of overtime and was successful as their two-point try put them up 36-35 with 58 seconds left
- Four straight completions left the team with four seconds on the clock and a 31-yard field goal attempt. The biggest struggle this season for La Salle has been the kicking game, and with 3, 615 fans on the edge of their seats, freshman kicker Nick Scrivens won the game with a perfect field goal.

From Our King...

"It was an honor to be recognized for my involvement and accomplishments at La Salle."
Dino Dedic



From Our Queen...

"Homecoming was a great experience and an honor to be a part of. For me, it was less about being recognized as a Queen and more about being recognized as a proud member of the LaSalle Community."

The job working in Admission is in my opinion, hands down one of the most important jobs on campus. There are countless people who do numerous things throughout this campus who do not receive enough credit for what they do. The Admission office is just one of them. We have given the student workers the unique acronym ACE - standing for Admission Campus Explorer.

Everyday the ACEs work to get prospective students to come to La Salle and love it like we do. Mailings, filing, answering phones, sending packets, touring and greeting families - we do it all. The most visible and very important part of the job is being a tour guide. Rain or shine, sleet or snow we'll show anyone La Salle if they want to see it. We know more random trivia about the school than most. Basically, when it comes down to it, we just love La Salle. Being that all we do is promote La Salle day in and day out it is something you could only do if you had a passion for it. Each person who works in the office has that passion and it is obvious through the work that they all do throughout the year.

Campus Explorers

The heart behind Admission

In order to work in the Admission office students must fill out an application and go through an interview process. After they have been hired there is a formal training session in addition to the 'on the job training' everyone receives. We work in the office whenever our schedule allows Monday through Friday from 8:30 - 4:30. We also work weekends at every Open House, big or small, and other workshops throughout the year.

As said before, it is one of the most important jobs on campus, and I do believe that has to be the most rewarding. Everyone will tell the reward is not in the paycheck, but in many other ways. One of the best feelings in the world is when you get a thank you card from someone who was on one of your tours, or an email saying 'thank-you'. The best reward might be when someone decides to confirm their admittance right in the office and tell you that you were a big reason in their deciding to come to La Salle.

I was hired in the Admission Office in my freshman year at La Salle. I've worked in the office ever since, and throughout the years it has become my second home. When I'm not in class or at my house, I'm in the office. The people who work here, both students and staff are like a family. A number of people I have had the opportunity to work with over the years here have been tremendous mentors and will be my friends for a lifetime. La Salle University is such a incredible institution itself, it only makes sense that the office who recruits prospective LaSallians would be nothing less.

"Give A Little, Give A Lot, Everything and Anything is better than Nothing"

It is no surprise that La Salle University would be taking all steps necessary to help those affected by Hurricane Katrina. Since a core value of the university is service, many students and staff, as expected, have embraced the effort to help. "We'll need to commit to service for the long run, and so it's important that we build and, then, sustain efforts that can have or stimulate lasting impacts," said Joseph Cicala, Dean of Students at La Salle. "I believe members of the La Salle University community, particularly our students, have responded and will continue to respond in association to the needs of our brothers and sisters who have been affected by Hurricane Katrina."

The University has taken in three displaced students from the affected area, providing free tuition and board. The students came with little to no belongings, so La Salle's RSA donated school supplies and clothes. Each student also has a mentor from the Community Development Office to guide them through this transition. La Salle aimed to raise $5,000 to support relief efforts and surpassed it. The Alumni Association has donated $1,000 in the names of 69 alumni who live in the affected area. Students in La Salle's Leadership and Global Understanding (LGU) program asked the program director, Robert Vogel, a professor of Education at La Salle, what they could do to help. A friend of Vogel's was holding a clothing drive at his residence, the St. James Apartments in Philadelphia, for the victims. Vogel and five LGU students spent an evening sorting and packing clothes. Since LGU strives to instill values of leadership in its students, Vogel was very impressed by the students' "initiative to reach out" and become "engaged citizens."

Hurricane Katrina

La Salle focuses on positive patronage despite dis

On Sept. 2, La Salle extended an invitation to all students who were displaced by Hurricane Katrina. According to Assistant Dean of Students Anna Melnyk Allen, Enrollment Services and Student Affairs collaborated with Dr. Rich Nigro, the Provost, and Ray Ricci, Vice President for Enrollment Services.

The group discussed ways to help students who were attending schools in the areas affected by the hurricane.

Melissa Yogis, Coordinator of Transfer Admission, explained the process of offering assistance to affected students. In addition to the University's own website, La Salle posted its offer on the websites of the National Association of College Admission and Counseling and Christian Brothers, as well as in various printed newspapers.

She said that other area schools also offered similar stipulations. Students would be able to attend fall semester classes and receive a meal plan free of charge with proof that they had paid tuition at their home schools.

Yogis said that the stipulation was to ensure that the damaged schools do not fold because of lack of funds. The students would have to pay for books and housing.

Yogis said that La Salle received "tons of inquiries" from interested students, but only three decided to attend before the Sept. 9 deadline.

The deadline was imposed to ensure that students did not miss too many classes to complete the fall semester.

Brittany Page and Linda Moton of Xavier University of Louisiana and Benjamin Thompson of Delgado Community College in New Orleans arrived in Philadelphia and have begun classes at La Salle.

There were no formal admissions procedures for the three students. Yogis said that no transcripts were required and the students filled out a simple application from memory. The registrar's office advised the students so that they wouldn't repeat any classes and their courses would be easily transferable.

Dr. Lane Neubauer, Director of Health Services; Lou Lamorte, Director of Career Services; and Br. Robert Kinzler, Director of University Ministry and Services, have assisted the students as Leadership Team members. The campus response has been overwhelmingly positive. "When I went with the two girls to get their IDs, some of the students in the Gold Card Office heard that they were from New Orleans," she said. "They were very friendly, receptive and welcoming."

Service Trip Auction

The community service organizations benefit not only the larger community, but also the reputation, wellbeing and spirit of La Salle. Students in these groups volunteer their time and effort to promoting the welfare of others in need, often with little demand for recognition or praise. However, the service to others begins far before the students get on the buses to travel to their work sites. The service trip auction is the ultimate drive behind community service. On Thursday, March 23, the Basket Bidding event raised $3,500; on Thursday, February 9th, the 3rd annual Lasallian Service Trips Auction raised $15,500 in one night. All proceeds benefit organizations such as Los Ninos, Project Appalachia, Week of Hope and Project Mapendo. The beauty of such giving is the many facets with which it works–some will donate their talents, possessions, services or hobbies to be auctioned off, then others will donate money to buy those auctions, and finally the student organizations will use that money to work and live "with materially impoverished but culturally and spiritually enriched communities." From student feedback, the volunteers have admitted that not only are they physically helping others, but they are also immensely mentally enriching themselves by the act of volunteering. It is no wonder then that the Service Trip Auction has been successful for the third year and will continue to be an annual event. With so much spiritual, physical, and emotional benefits, that night is just one perfect example of Lasallian virtues being upheld.

Mr. Belding Visits La Salle

By Jen Colletta, '07

Hundreds of students stood in line outside the Dan Rodden Theatre Friday, April 7, anxiously awaiting the arrival of television star, Dennis Haskins, who is best remembered by our generation as having played the tough, yet hysterical, Mr. Belding on the cult classic Saved By the Bell. He has been touring colleges across the country for the past year, spreading his message of motivation to students.

The Executive Board of RSA was responsible for bringing Haskins to La Salle's campus. "We heard he does college tours and we got a hold of his agent and we just took it from there," sophomore Erin Salvatore, RSA Director of Area Relations, said. "A few phone calls and e-mails later, we were booking him."

Haskins' show was previewed by a short video, detailing his television and film work over the past few decades. Although he is mostly associated with the character of Mr. Belding, he has performed in dozens of other shows, such as 7th Heaven and The West Wing.

Once the film was over and Salvatore began her introduction of Haskins, chants of "Belding" could be heard around the theatre. As he walked on stage, the crowd of nearly 320 students burst into screams and applause. After Haskins detailed his personal struggles in the business and the history of the show for which he is so well-known, he invited several La Salle students up to the stage to compete in a Saved By the Bell trivia session.

The winner, who had to answer three correct questions about the show, received an autographed DVD set of the fifth season of the show. Haskins closed the program with a short question and answer session.

He received a standing ovation from the rowdy crowd, who scrambled out of the theatre to wait in line for autographs. The line snaked from the theatre door all the way down to the entrance to the food court.

"I get to go to schools and reminisce with a generation of kids who grew up watching the show. I know that this show was the show to this generation of kids. They're not kids anymore, but to me they are," Haskins said. "It's really fun for me. Everybody has a smile on their face. They have something to say. They give me a hug. How bad is that? It's a really great thing."

Once Haskins signed the last autograph, he even scrawled his John Hancock on one of the Affirmation signs hanging in the hallway outside of the theatre.

Haskins said that purpose of his college tours is to encourage students never to give up on something that they want.

"It's all based in a lot of the truths that we all know. I'd like to help people to not make some of the same mistakes that I've made," Haskins said. "And I want to let them know that if they do make mistakes, it's okay and to learn from those mistakes and go forward. But I really just want to encourage them to follow their dreams."

Reflections from the Interns

Exciting. That's the best way to sum up my experiences. I had an opportunity to get a first hand look at the largest remote television production in the world, use the latest equipment and be among thousands of journalists from throughout the world. It was an honor.
David Sullivan, '08

I thought it was a great chance to travel, see the Olympics and work for NBC. Chances like this don't come around very often, and I couldn't let this pass me by. I also hope that this trip is successful so that interning with the Olympics can be a reoccurring thing at La Salle.
Maria DiKun, '06

I want to get into sports broadcasting, so what better place to work than at one of the premiere sporting events in the entire world? It's certainly humbling and a very exciting honor. It means a lot to me personally to be involved so closely with one of the greatest events in all of sports.
Adam Bagni, '07

I applied for this internship not just because I thought it would be a great experience, but also because there are very few opportunities of this caliber that come your way during college. When I heard about the internship, it was a no-brainer decision for me.
Matt DeLucia, '07

I'm learning that it's important to take that extra step, the one that we usually think is too much of a hassle to do, because it is this extra step that shows future employers how dedicated and driven we are in them and their field. It makes us unique and sets us apart from the rest.
Hannah Loper, '06

It feels great that so many La Salle students are able to participate in this historic event. The experiences that all of us will be getting and the stories that we will be able to tell when we return will be things the 12 of us will still be sharing with people 50 years from now.

On Sunday, Jan. 29, the University Ministry and Services had a unique addition to its Sunday evening Mass. Twelve communication students traveling to Torino, Italy were "blessed for safety and success," according to Sister Eileen McGowan.

These 12 students won an NBC competition to work as interns at the 2006 Winter Olympics after applying last March. About half of the students going to Italy were able to attend the Sunday evening Mass.

The ceremony lasted about one hour, with the blessing section lasting about five minutes. This was a larger ceremony than usual, with around 120 people in attendance. Reverend James T. Dever spoke. The blessing focused on safety, meeting new people and exploring the world. Dever told the students to "take with them, as part of their traveling equipment, hearts wrapped in wonder with which to rejoice in the lives of all those they meet." Dever spoke in a clear and poetic manner.

"May all the skies and highways ahead of them be free from harm and evil," Dever said.

The prayer also addressed how important it is to learn about the world around them. It elaborated on the learning experience they will have, illustrating how much excitement and stories they will be able to tell. When asked about the special blessing, Dever said, "Students were called up as congregation extended their hands in blessing."

Seniors Anthony Bianco, Maria A. Dikun, Kevin Feeney, Matthew Juliano, Hannah Loper, Benjamin Rosehart, juniors Adam Bagni, Brandon Davidow, Matthew DeLucia, Nicholas Smalarz and sophomores Trevor Maki and Daivd Sullivan were selected to attend as NBC 2006 winter interns.

2006 Olympics in Torino, I

By Ben Rosehart, '06

Similar to Opening Weekend freshman year of college, the beginning of this trip was reminiscent of packing up your belongings, transplanting yourself into a dorm room with a roommate and meeting a ton of new faces in a totally new environment. But this was different, because when I started unpacking in my room, I saw suitcases under my roommate's bed and a tag that saw the familiar name "Matt Juliano." I lucked out with a La Salle friend as a roommate.

One thing that definitely stands out in my opinion: the majority of us from La Salle tend to gravitate together, especially the eight of us in the same housing area called the Riberi Media Village. We don't just hang out with La Salle interns; we've also met a lot of interns from other schools, including Ithaca and Iona. But you can tell we look for each other.

Sunday's general orientation was pretty laid-back, but everyone was looking forward to watching the Super Bowl that evening. Keep in mind, it didn't start until 12:30 a.m. here in Italy.

Five La Salle guys watching the Super Bowl until 3:30 a.m., proceeding to not catch a taxi or bus headed the right direction and ultimately singing "Afternoon Delight" and the U.S.A. National Anthem while walking for over an hour and a half back to the Riberi Media Village is something I won't ever forget.

On a more serious note, Casey Feeney, who had been in Torino for three weeks prior to the rest of us getting here, got promoted within five days from runner to Production Associate. By working hard he already set the table for all of us to continue to represent La Salle well.

Another thing that jumps out at me is that a number of us are determined on firmly planting La Salle on the national map for communication. Our name is out there, now it's time to cement it as the growing force that it is.

Monday and Tuesday I basically learned the layout of the NBC setup in the INC, which is like a maze of rooms with offices, production and editing suites and everything from an IT or graphics help desk to an entire smorgasbord of televisions and tape decks.

This is exciting to be working right next to people who will be in charge of putting together various feeds of sports as they are happening for the viewing public. But I know this will get stressful. I am positive things are going to get crazy in Central Tape.

This already is making La Salle proud and we thank you for your support. This will help the present freshman class and future Explorers go to the 2008 Olympics in Beijing. This will be an unforgettable experience for everyone here in Torino.

This is awesome.

Welcome to the Family

When Carolyn Lemongelli, in her role as Coordinator of new Student Programs and Administration, welcomes new students and families to La Salle, she does so on behalf of the University, the Division of Student Affairs, and her family. Her family? Isn't that a bit personal? Yes, in fact, it is, and in Carolyn's case, it's not rhetoric. You see, her daugher, Melissa, graduated in 2002, and this year both Carolyn and her other daughter, Jillian, became proud alums with the Class of 2006. So this La Salle experience really has been a family affair.

Carolyn joined the La Salle community as an Administrative Assistant in 1998, and almost immediately assumed a more specialized role as Administrative Assistant of Judicial Affairs. Upon completing her Associate Degree in 2003, Carolyn was again advanced to the role of Community Development Associate. As a result of attaining her BA in Organizational Dynamics, Carolyn now holds her current position. Her commitment to La Salle, however, cannot be measured in degrees or titles. Through her unique and combined roles as student, parent and staff member, Carolyn has always been in the position to assist students and families in a special way. From overseeing the many details of programs like Day ONE and Opening Weekend, to refining the ways we fulfill our stated mission and goals, Carolyn has always given fully of her talent and skills.

So, as she welcomes new students and families to our Lasallian community, she expresses thanks for all that La Salle has offered her family. We, in turn, express our thanks to her - for her contributions that make La Salle a positive experience for so many other people. Thank you, Carolyn, and congratulations on joining your daughters as alums!

WEXP has an Engaging Ye

Listenership may have been small this year for WEXP, but the strides it made in becoming a q radio station could not have been greater.

The year started off with a new look and a new attitude. New office furniture and a major clean up by a new, motivated executive board helped to make the office better than ever. With help from a budget that was healthier than in year's past, the clean up continued with updated equipment, new music selections and a much needed paint job. Feeling good from within attracted a wealth of new DJ talent that kept the airwaves live for a greater number of hours.

While most students will remember the basketball game of the year to be the game when the Explorer's played Villanova, the WEXP Sports Department will remember the game against St. Joe's. It's the broadcast of this game that earned the station a Pennsylvania Association of Broadcasters Award. The crew has one more decoration to hang in the newly decorated office now, this one, a First Place plaque.

WEXP also jumped on the community service bandwagon by helping to raise money for two important causes. Raffles were held to help the victims of Hurricane Katrina and for injured football player Preston Plevretes. Over $1,200 was raised through these raffles.

The annual 24 hour live marathon was carried off without a hitch. Many freshman DJ's were instrumentral in keeping the tradition alive and staying up all night to make it happen. There were prizes, live music and even mad libs. The station was bustling with traffic and there is already anticipation building for next year.

November 29 may have been a day like every other for most La Salle students and employees, however, it's a day Dawn Fraser, WEXP Advisor will never forget. At approximately 1:30 in the afternoon, station manager Ben Rosehart came into her office and asked her to check out the updated website, then asked her to listen to the station. Soon after, Dawn, and everyone else listening at that time, heard her boyfriend express his love to her, and asked her to marry him. In the first ever marriage proposal on WEXP, Dawn said yes.

2005-2006 was an exciting year for WEXP, and 2006-2007 promises to be just as exciting. In store for the '06-07 year is the return to AM. Equipment has been purchased to install an antenna on the roof of the Union Building that will broadcast WEXP on 1600 AM all over campus. Students not logged onto a computer will now be able to listen to the station not only in their dorm rooms, but in the Union, in classrooms, and in their cars.

Excitement is building for WEXP. As they say in radio, "Stay Tuned".

Academics - long research papers, experiments, novels to read within a week's time, business portfolios, nights spent awake with many cups of coffee; and yet is also one of the most personally rewarding aspects of university life.

Students test themselves, second guess beliefs once labeled indisputable truths and not only form knowledge of the world around them but also of their own selves and their own capabilities.

La Salle University prides itself on its liberal arts education, and rightly so. Here, students are immersed in multiple fields, connecting separate ideas to form one broad but solid sense of knowledge.

School of Arts and Sciences

In keeping with the mission of La Salle University, the School of Arts and Sciences is dedicated to excellence in teaching and to developing the full intellectual, personal, and social potential of our students in an environment of mutual respect and cooperation. The faculty and staff of the School of Arts and Sciences provides a liberal education of both general and specialized studies for its own students and for those from the Schools of Business and Nursing. The undergraduate and graduate programs of the School also aim at preparing students for lifelong learning, informed service and progressive leadership in their communities, and for fulfilling the immediate and final goals of their lives. Through its graduate programs, especially, the School strives to support the career aspirations of students and to meet the needs of society, now and in the future.

With the shared mission of the Christian Brothers, we are a community passionately engaged in the process of enriching ourselves as teachers, researchers, and scholar-learners through the power of enhanced academic experience. Faculty and staff in the School of Arts and Sciences believe a liberal academic experience should provide the opportunity for the mutual advancement and sharing of the excitement of learning for its own sake.

Understanding our Culture

American Studies

Although small and fairly new to the La Salle community, American Studies is growing and thriving on campus. The major, which is frequently integrated with the Elementary/ Special Education program, combines the many facets of American culture to allow students to understand our diverse nation. Those who study Amercian Studies, under the direction of Dr. Franics Ryan, take courses in American history, literature, film, philosophy, religion, political science and in three American Studies courses dealing with different aspects of American Culture. This diverse major builds a foundation which students can either continue their education or enter careers such as law, education, journalism and politics.

The Art Department, which includes both Art History and Studio Art, has introduced new courses in Figure Sculpting, Museum Studies, and Museums of Philadelphia. The department is currently working with La Salle's Art Museum for student projects in the museum. Recently, art majors have done internships at the Philadelphia Museum of Art, the Institute of Contemporary Art, the Peggy Guggenheim Museum in Venice, and the Philadelphia Mural Project. Next year, the department will offer a course in Mural Painting, where students, collaborating with minors in the Leadership and Global Understanding program, will paint a mural in Philadelphia.

Biology

Preparing for the Future

La Salle is honestly one of the best choices that I have made in my life, especially in terms of gaining proper preparation for pursuing my career goal of becoming a physician. Not only because of the high acceptance rate of the La Salle University students into medical school, but also because the education that I've gained here has given me both academic as well as life lessons that will always remain with me.

This is greatly due to the wonderful and extremely helpful faculty, particularly those in the Biology and Science department. Though my curriculum has consisted mostly of science courses, the liberal art courses that I have taken have also helped to enhance my overall understanding, thus preparing me to be a well-rounded person.

Chemistry

"The Chemistry Department is one of the closest-knit on campus. I know I can ask any one of the professors anything and they would be happy to help."
-Pamela Woodward, Freshman

The Department of Chemistry at La Salle University trains students for their future careers. Students enrolled in the program spend a significant amount of time in the classroom and the laboratory, where they learn the necessary concepts of chemistry. In the laboratory, they have the opportunity to learn techniques and work with instruments that they will need to know how to use in graduate school and future careers.

The department is unique because of the relationship between the teachers and students. The small size of the department fosters both student-teacher and student-student relationships, forming a close community of friends and mentors.

One of the main organizations of the Chemistry Department is the Chymian Society, of which all of the Chemistry majors and minors are a part. The Chymian Society, which was resurrected this year, plans events for the chemistry students, such as trips or guest speakers. The society also attempts to construct community outreach programs, one of which involves performing chemistry experiments with children.

Students in the Department of Chemistry are encouraged to undertake independent research projects outside of classes. In these projects, students do laboratory research on a topic of interest for a semester under a faculty member's supervision. From these projects, students gain experience in research that will help to prepare them for graduate school or research-related careers after La Salle. The curriculum required by the department for a degree in chemistry also requires that the student get a diverse, liberal arts education, which makes them well-rounded individuals and prepares them well for their future careers.

Communication

Linking us Together

"As a senior in high school, my mom and I toured the Comm Center and TV studio. Four years later, I know I made the right choice and have been blessed with what I've learned and accomplished at La Salle 56 and my internships with the Eagles, Fox 29, and the NBC Olympics."
Ben Rosehart, senior

Torino: fine Italian food, covered walkways, stone streets, the Alps in the distance, the Olympics, random Olympian and journalist sightings at bars and restaurants, and of course an internship with NBC.

NBC hired eleven students from La Salle to intern for the Winter Games. Since NBC is such a large organization our tasks as interns were very diverse. Some of us were loggers, while others were runners or production assistants. We all had different jobs and were working different schedules. This was our daily routine for three weeks.

While at NBC there was a chance that you could run into someone famous while eating lunch in the NBC commissary. We saw sports personalities Bob Costas and Jim Lampley.

There was also the chance of seeing some members of Team USA: Ted Ligety, Chad Hedrich, Sasha Cohen, Apollo Anton Ono, the men's Curling Team, or the women's Bobsleigh Team.

Times in Torino were not just about work and celebrity sightings. Some of the things we found to fill our downtime were sightseeing, attempts at skiing, shopping, walking around, getting lost, and taking in the Italian culture.

Being in Torino, being at the Olympics, and working for NBC, is a combination of things that I never imagined I would ever get to do. I had an amazing time for those three short weeks. It was definitely an opportunity that I will remember forever.

Computer Science

Advancing our Technology

The Computer Science major offers three undergraduate programs. These innovative programs are designed to prepare students with the background necessary to go directly into the computing profession or to apply to graduate school.

Two of these major programs provide a traditional, strong core in the discipline of Computer Science; one leads to a B.S. degree and the other to a B.A. degree. The third major program provides a B.S. degree in Information Technology.

The B.S. program in Computer Science provides a solid foundation for staying current in computer science. Students gain the vital background needed whether they want to pursue one of the numerous positions available such as Computer Program Analyst, or wish to go on to graduate school

The B.A. program is applications-oriented, stressing both the development of technology and business skills so students will be prepared for direct entry into a management position upon graduating.

The Information Technology major is designed for those students interested in the study of networks and client support systems. Students will be qualified for many challenging positions within an IT department, including Network Administrator and Database Manager.

Criminal Justice

Learning the la

Courses in the Criminal Justice major at La Salle University range from a broad overview of what crime is exactly, to the specific types of crime and how to deal with them from a legal standpoint.

Students must take a course on crime and its causes, a study of the sociological and social psychological foundations of crime and delinquency, as well as an introductory course on criminal law, which covers law enforcement, the administration of justice, and the punishment and treatment of criminals. Students also take courses that offer in-depth studies of the organization and function of the police, the courts, and system of inprisionment, probation and parole.

In addition to their criminal justice classes, Criminal Justice majors must also take courses in sociololgy, science, philosophy, political science, and psychology.

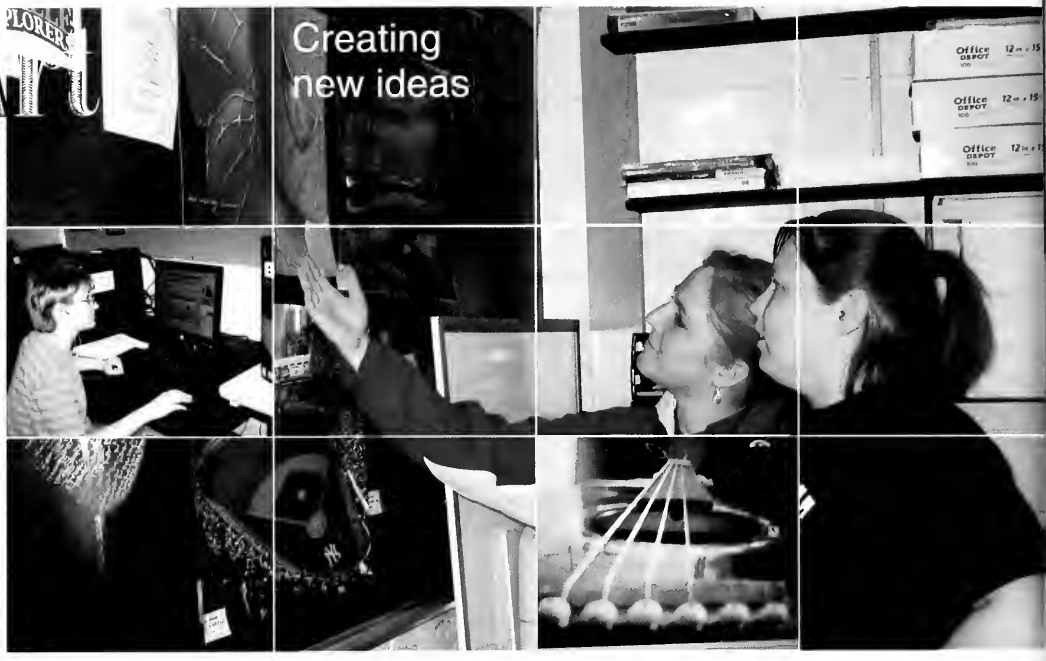
DArt



The Digital Arts and Multimedia Design program at La Salle University leads to a Bachelor of Arts degree. The goal of the programs is to develop a liberal arts foundation, which is focused on current technical trends.

Each student selects a track of courses from their specific interests. Students can concentrate in Multimedia and Creative Design, Professional Electronic Publishing, or Technical Development.

La Salle maintains both state-of-the-art computer facilities and up-to-date software that are accessible to students and faculty in the Digital Arts and Multimedia Design discipline.

Students have gotten jobs as web developers, logo designers, database specialists, network designers and private consultants. Some graduates are also pursuing graduate studies in fine and media arts, or computer science.

Economics and International Studies

Analyzing the Market

According to David George, chair of the Economics department, "Economics is a challenging and rigorous subject. It has served as a pathway to a variety of fulfilling positions and careers in the worlds of business, government service, law, research, and teaching. It is also a fascinating subject that bridges the age-old questions of what constitutes a 'good society' with the practical questions of the day."

In order to provide students with contemporary and well-rounded knowledge, he and his fellow colleagues are constantly conducting research in the field of economics. Dr. George believes research is one of the building blocks of successful teaching.

Dr. George is president of Association of Social Economy and has written many articles, one of which is heavily used by the Harvard Law Review to study public interest advertisements on junk food.

Fellow professor, Richard E. Mshomba, was a 2005 Lindback Award recipient for Distinguished Teaching. He is currently on research leave for the spring 2006 semester and has a sabbatical in the fall of 2006. He is working on his second book on Africa and the World Trade Organization. He is also studying the effects of world trade organization agreements on African countries.

Education

The Education major offers teacher preparation programs in Secondary Education and Elementary/Special Education. These programs are approved by the Pennsylvania Department of Education. The Secondary Education major leads to a recommendation for an Instructional I certificate in Citizenship Education, Communications, English, Biology, Chemistry, Mathmatics, French, General Science, Earth Space Science, German, Italian, Latin, and Spanish. The Elementary/Special Education program is a dual major which requires students to take a second major in an academic discipline. American Studies is the designated second major for students studying Elementary/Special Education, although students are able to choose a different major. The Elementary/Special Education major provides graduating students with recommnedations for an Instructional I Certification in elementary education as well as in special education, including cognitive, behavioral, and physical or health disabilities.

"I chose Secondary Education because I want to make a positive impact on the lives of the students I teach and go home at the end of the day feeling like I've done something meaningful."

The English Department brought two Irish writers to La Salle during the spring semester as part of their celebration of Irish Literature. Sebastion Barry read a selection from his recent novel, The Long, Long Way, capturing the audience with his Irish accent and humor. He gave a brief background of the novel, sang two Irish songs, and answered many questions from the audience. Connor MacPherson's one-act play came alive when performed by Stephen Patrick Smith, a Barry Moore award-winning actor. Smith, the son of English department assistant chair, Dr. Stephen Smith, also performed the play at Villanova University. An estimated three hundred students attended both events. The speakers were arranged by Dr. Stephen Smith. The performances were sponsored by the Concert and Lecture Series, the Dean of Arts and Sciences Fund for guest speakers, and the English department.

"I chose La Salle because I couldn't find an English department like this anywhere else! The professors and staff were so helpful and friendly when I came to visit that I just knew I'd enjoy everything it had to offer. Beverly MJ Brown, '06"

Enviormental Science

The environmental science program is centered on core courses which all environmental science students are required to take, after which students can concentrate in one of three areas: Environmental Biology, Environmental Geology, or Environmental Chemistry.

The program is designed to provide students with the background necessary for many positions in the environmental industry and the necessary skills to enter graduate programs in the environmental science field.

In the program, many students attend field trips, to help enhance traditional classroom learning. Recent trips taken by the Environmental Science majors include a trip to a water treatment plant and wastewater plant, to a trash conversion plant, and to the Wissahickon River. Students also took another trip that allowed them to study sedimentology.

Bridging the Gap

Foreign Languages

Breaking language barriers and facilitating communication across the world—this is the goal of the Foreign Languages Department. The Foreign Languages major allows students to learn different languages and to obtain greater social and cultural understanding.
Students in this major can choose from numerous languages to study: Classics, French, German, Russian, Italian, Spanish, Irish-Gaelic, Japanese, Polish, and Ukrainian.

Students can also receive teacher certifications in French, German, Italian, Latin, and Spanish.

The objective of each program is to produce graduates who have mastered the skills of speaking, reading, writing, and comprehending; who are familiar with the history and culture of the foreign land; and who respect the literary traditions of its people and their language.

Geology

Our program in Geology is designed to provide students with the experiences and skills necessary for employment in the geologic science industry, or prepare students to enter graduate programs. By taking two chemistry courses and one math course in addition to 16 geology courses, students recieve the education needed to enter the workforce. Our graduates have been successful in finding positions in state and federal agencies, as well as in private industry. Many of these positions are related to the environmental field. Our alumni are also working in the petroleum and mineral industries as well.

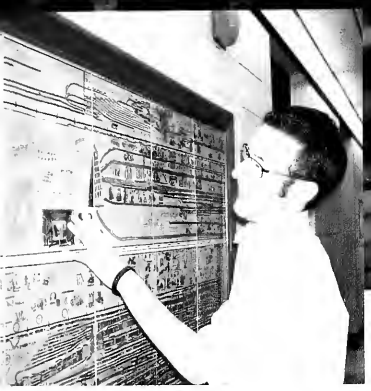
History

Examing our Past



In order to graduate as a History major, there is an addition to the two core courses (HIS 151 and 251) and the core concentration course (HIS 300). History majors are required to take one additional U.S. History course, two European History courses, two Non-Western History courses, three courses in an area of concentration, and two senior seminars in an area of concentration.

The three areas of concentration students can choose from are United States history, European history, or non-Western history. History majors who intend post-graduate study must also, at the direction of their advisors and with the approval of the Chair, take at least two courses in a foreign language.

Integrated Science, Business, and Technology

Combining Disciplines

"What if...."
This question founded La Salle's Integrated Science, Business and Technology Program. ISBT encourages students to study the effects of new technologies and their by asking "what if" instead of "why."
ISBT recently purcased a Virtual Control Room, a virtual simulator that replicates biotechnology and various energy forms. La Salle is one of the first schools to incoprorate such technology in the classroom.
The ISBT major offers students the choice of concentrating in three distinct areas of study:

-Energy and natural resources, the first concentration, focuses on how elements of the earth are connected and how they affect everyday life.
-Information and knowledge management is the second concentration. It focuses on robotics, artificial intelligence, and computer networks.
-The third concentration is biotechnology. This program allows students to study medicine, agriculture, genetics and pharmaceuticals.
Teri Olsen, '07

"The reason I chose ISBT was to give myself the skills necessary to choose from any number of possible career paths. I liked the small class sizes, diversity of classes offered, the great accessibility of the ISBT staff and their sincere willingness to help us along the way."

Mathematics and Informational Technology

Calculating Figures

The Mathmatics program offers three courses of study; a Bachelor of Arts degree, a Bachelor of Science degree, and a dual Mathmatics-Education degree. The B.A. in Mathmatics requires twelve courses and the B.S. requires eighteen courses.

The Mathmatics program offers various courses, including algebra, trigonometry, calculus, geometries, mathmatical technology, and a history of mathmatics, to name a few.

The Informational Technology program requires students complete seventeen courses for a Bachelor of Science degree. Students must take an introduction to information technology, which covers hardware and software components, the Internet, and help desk software and concepts. Upper level IT courses include computer architecture, applied operating systems and distributed systems, and information security.

Philosophy

So what, exactly, is philosophy? Marc Moreau, chair of the Philosphy department, says philosophy is "a deep part of the Catholic tradition. It's what our lives are all about and how we can improve them." According to the philosophy website, "Philosophy is the pursuit of a meaningful life." It says, "Since a meaningful life is a life lived in touch with reality, philosophers develop strategies for breaking through the delusions and self-deceptions that keep us human beings from seeing things as they really are".

Since a meaningful life is authentic and full of purpose, philosophers try to home in on the things that really matter in life, the important things whose pursuit makes life worthwhile. Since a meaningful life is a good and humane life, philosophers study human nature, the nature of goodness, and the many masks that evil wears.

"Philosophy is the ultimate reality check."

"Philosophy is the love of knowledge which fits in nicely with my chosen future career paths - teaching and writing. The disciplines learned in philosophic training will serve me well."

Political Science

Examing the System

The Political Science major requires students to complete sixteen courses. One of the first classes Political Science majors must take is POL 151, Principles of American Government. This course provides an overview of the principles, institutions, and decision-making processes of American Government. The course focuses on the foundations of the American constitutional order and the development of contemporary American government at the national level.

Topics are approached in a critical and analytical way, seeking to understand the tradeoffs inherent in particular democratic choices. Historical, comparative, and analytical methods are employed. Required of all political science majors and minors.

All political science majors must take two senior seminars. POL 480, the first seminar, is a study of the methods of research and scholarly writing. Students complete research and reports on individual assignments. POL 481, the second seminar, requires students to conduct supervised research and writing on a major topic. There are weekly presentation and group discussions of individual papers. Students must submit a written thesis.

From La Salle's Political Science website

"I chose political science to help me understand what exactly is happening in our world. It is necessary for people to pay attention to politics, for politics has an innumerable amount of effects on our lives."

Psychology

The Psychology Department at La Salle University epitomizes an ideal educational community. The faculty consists of some of the most genuine, considerate, and brilliant professors, and the educational experience that psychology majors are exposed to is priceless. Over the course of four years, I have become friends with many of my fellow psychology classmates and feel that majoring in psychology allowed a special camaraderie to develop within the students in the major. I truly believe that I have formed friendships that will last my entire lifetime.

As you look around campus, you will almost always see psychology students interacting with each other. Whether it be for fun or to study for one of Dr. Falcone's Statistics exams, to attempt to understand the role of ion channels in action potentials for Dr. Wilson's Physiological test, or to try to remember the year that G. Stanley Hall organized a conference at Clark University for Br. Burke's History and Systems Midterm (which we all know was 1909), psychology students truly display La Sallian values.

La Salle's Public Administration program focuses on preparing our students to manage in the public (government) and non-profit sectors. Some of the topics covered include budgeting, ethics, policy analysis, human resources, and crisis management. Through the various courses, students become prepared for work after school. Students recieve information from primary sources like

Dr. Sestak, a former Vice Admiral with experience in Iraq and Afghanastan. who also served as Director of Defense Policy reporting to the National Security Council under President Clinton. This semester marks the end of an era. After over 10 years of leading the Religion Department, Dr. Kelly is stepping down as Religion Chair at the end of the semester. Even though he may be stepping down, he will remain on the La Salle faculty.

After graduating from La Salle with a GPA of 4.0, Dr. Kelly entered the Christian Brothers. From there, he served on the faculty of West Catholic in Philadelphia and Calvert Hall in Baltimore. From there, he earned degrees from Lumen Vitae in Brussels and Louvain University. Dr. Kelly became Assistant Professor of Religion in 1972.

By 1976, Dr. Kelly was promoted to Associate Professor of Religion. Shortly after, he won the Lindback Award for Excellence in Teaching (1977). He served as visiting scholar at Oxford University in 1978-1979.

By 1981, Dr. Kelly was elevated to Professor of Religion. By 1988, he was named visiting scholar of St. Norbert College. By 1994, Dr. Kelly became Chair of the Religion Department. In 1996, he also served as Director of the Graduate Religion Program. He held this dual position until Fr. Frank Berna, O.F.M., assumed the Graduate Religion Directorship.

During his tenure at La Salle, Dr. Kelly had several books published. His most recent book will be released in late May, 2006. He also is a leading scholar on the German theologian D. Bonhoeffer. As Religion Chair, he has been the advisor to countless Religion majors.

Even though he is still going to be on staff, his leadership will be missed greatly.

Social Work

The Social Work Program at La Salle Unviersity has its roots in the tradition and mission of the Christian Brothers. The Social Work Program supports the University's mission to pursue the "free search for truth by teaching its students the basic skills, knowledge, and values that they will need for a life of human dignity."

The Program seeks to establish an atmosphere in which community members may openly bear witness to their convictions on world peace and social justice. Students integrate Lasallian values with the theory, skills, and values of the social work profession.

Building upon the liberal arts foundation of the unversity, the Program prepares students for generalist social work practice in the urban community.

What is generalist social work practice? It is the collaborative process that employs a professional helping relationship directed toward individual, family, group, organizational and/or community empowerment and the promotion of social and economic justice.

From the 2005-06 Undergraduate Catalog

"As a freshman, I've only taken one Social Work class so far, however, I really liked it. It helps that my teacher used to be a social worker, so she is able to give us personal experiences and a real viewpoint."

Taking a new approach this year, Sociology majors joined the Criminal Justice and Social Work majors to establish an integrated umbrella student organization called the Social Transformation Society (STS). Among other activities, STS members did fund-raising to provide some relief to poor families. They also organized a career day wherein two professionals from each discipline talked to students about preparation for their future careers.

A senior Sociology major did an internship with the Opportunities Industrialization Centers International (OICI). By taking part in the OICI's Building Global Bridges program, the intern received the skills needed for a career in international development. The academic year saw a number of students inducted into Alpha Kappa Delta, the International Sociology Honor Society, as well as a good number of seniors dual majoring in Psychology, Criminal Justice, English, and International Economics. With the sociological advantage, one of the dual majors will study law at Notre Dame University; another will pursue a Master's in education at Immaculata University; and still another will work for the Deutsche Bank in Tokyo, Japan.

School of Business

Over the past six years, the key strategy of the School of Business at La Salle has been the creation of Corporate Partnerships. The partnership initiatives of the School of Business directly influence how our faculty teach our future business leaders and how our partners benefit from our graduates.

By focusing on innovative technologies, global work environments, and leadership development, our faculty place high emphasis on providing practical education and career preparedness, just some of the many outcomes of these successful partnerships.

The La Salle University School of Business recently celebrated the 25th Anniversary of the MBA program, a program that has educated nearly 5,000 business leaders in this area.

Accounting

Computing America's future

This year the Accounting Department celebrated the 40th anniversary of our Accounting Awards Dinner. Seven students and six faculty were honored with awards at the dinner. The Pennsylvania Institute of Certified Public Accountants Award was given to senior Nadya Popil. Matthew Schaeffer, class of 2006, was awarded the Becker Conviser CPA Review Scholarship. Stephanie Kozlecki, junior, received the Jack Keen Award. The Michael A. DeAngelis Scholarship was given to three juniors: Heather Boudwin, Christina Coho, and Joseph McCall.

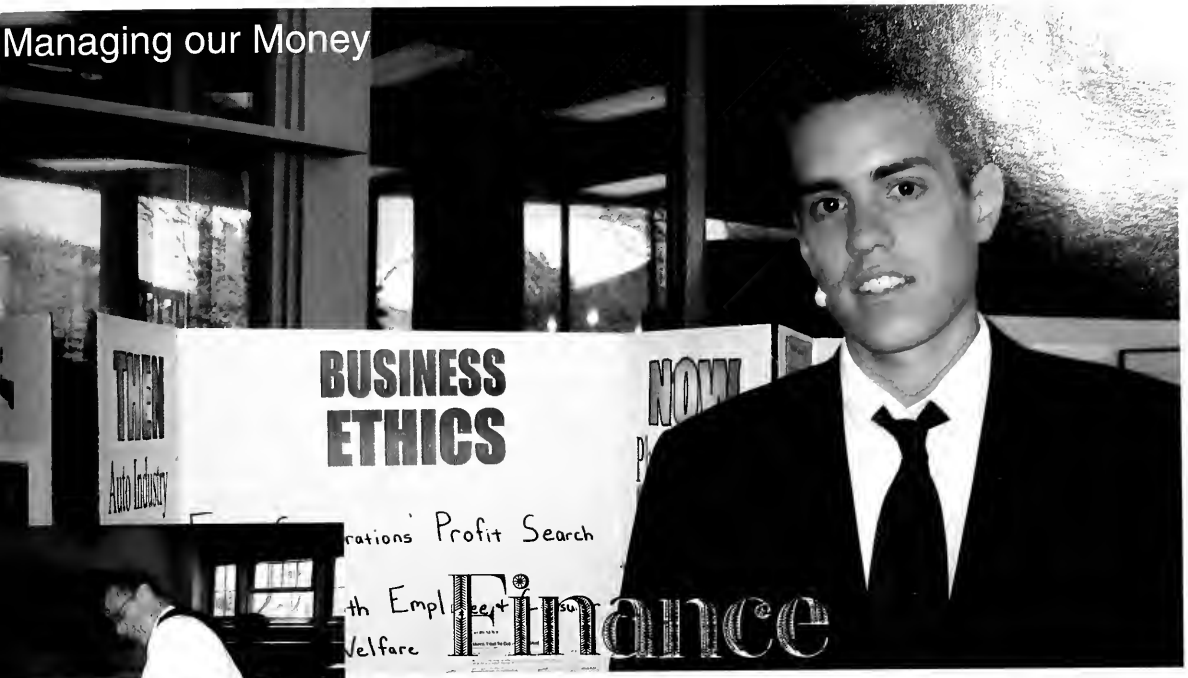
Managing our Money



Finance

Finance plays a central and critical role in the functioning of the economy. All enterprises need to finance their strategic undertakings as well as their ongoing operations. Individuals, likewise, need to plan for important future events. The study of Finance provides students with the knowledge and tools necessary to work and thrive in today's dynamic, global financial environment.

Students of finance typically follow career paths in financial management (such as working in the finance department of a corporation or government unit, or working in a consulting firm), investments (brokerage, portfolio management, security analysis), or financial services (working in a bank or an insurance company).

The curriculum of the Finance Department is uniquely designed to meet the needs of students wishing to pursue any of these career paths.

Understanding the importance of linking theory and practice, the Department recommends that students consider joining Gamma Iota Sigma (the Risk Management and Insurance Club) and/or the Investment Club (where students manage an actual investment fund). In addition, internship or co-op opportunities are available for Finance majors.

Management Information Systems

Preparing for management

Management Information Systems (MIS) focuses on designing computer systems to help people do their work better. It involves bridging the gap between technology and the people who use it by converting user requirements into cost-effective computer and information systems and finding ways to make users and systems more productive. Information systems have always been significant in the management of organizations.

The use of computers continues to evolve from machines which could calculate and produce simple reports to distributed multiprocessors with powerful individual work-stations for the end-user. At La Salle, students are prepared for jobs in the managemnt of informational systems.

Marketing

Bringing us In

Many people believe that marketing consists only of advertising and personal selling. Although marketing includes these activities, the purpose of marketing in an organization is much broader; the purpose of marketing is to create and retain satisfied customers. Marketing begins by understanding consumer behavior, discovering customers' needs and then developing programs to satisfy those needs.

The decisions made in creating marketing programs are essential to the success of any organization. Which customer groups shall we serve? What kind of products and services will we offer? How should they be priced, promoted, and distributed to the customer? The fundamental marketing concept is that organizations can achieve their goals by satisfying consumer needs.

Organizational Management

Personalizing Business

Organizational Management majors study the "human" side of business. Ultimately all business decisions are made by people. Organizational Management majors learn how to manage an organization's human resources to maximize its profitability and enhance employee satisfaction. Organizational Management majors learn how organizations influence, and are influenced by, their strategy, business environments, technology, social norms, size, and life stages. They learn how to recruit, select, train, appraise, compensate, and manage a diverse, talented work force in a competitive global environment.

Like all business majors at La Salle, they also obtain a broad background in all areas of business through courses in the core business curriculum.
All firms require people skilled in organizational management. As a group, Organizational Management majors have very diverse interests. Many want to enter a career in human resource managment. Others want to be entrepreneurs and someday run their own companies. Some know they want a career in business, but have not yet decided which business career path is best suited to their interests.

School of Nursing and Health Sciences

Consistent with Lasallian values, the Mission of the School of Nursing is to provide excellent education programs to develop culturally and clinically competent, caring nursing and health science professionals and to prepare each student for a life of continued learning. Undergraduate and graduate students engage in educational programs that develop appreciation of the autonomy, dignity, spirituality, complexity, and diversity of the people they serve. Students think critically, communicate effectively, and possess a comprehensive body of knowledge about the health status of individuals, families, groups, communities, and populations in a changing society and world.

Nursing

Caring for us

A new addition to La Salle's Nursing Programs is attracting a lot of attention these days: The new "patient" is the High-Fidelity Simulator, a technologically-advanced, computerized manikin in the Learning Resource Center. The manikin provides a novel teaching method for nurses and other clinicians to learn skills, gain experience, and develop abilities in both routine and emergency situations.

La Salle Nursing, among many top-flight schools offering the advanced technology in its graduate and undergraduate programs, will build clinical scenarios that students may encounter in actual nursing environments.

Simulation technology has been an effective educational tool that has resulted in significant improvement for teaching in clinical areas and in research. According to Mary Lou Gies, B.S.N., M.S.N., coordinator of the Nursing Learning Center, the new simulator "has added a new dimension to the scope of our clinical training."

From La Salle's Nursing Explorer, 2005 Edition

"Being a nursing major is challenging but knowing how much you are helping people physically and emotionally makes the experience so rewarding. You just have to make the good stuff ou tweigh the bad stuff and just keep getting through school to get that degree."

Nutrition

Leading a Healthier Life

Starting in 1999 with only five students, La Salle's Nutrition Program now has more than 50 students. Students are taught the three areas of nutrition, clinical, community and food managemant, by porfessors who have had significant amounts of experience in their specialtu areas and contine to practice while teaching -all of whom are Registered Dieticians. According to Jule Anne Henstenburg explains, "We are practicing in an ever changing enviorment. New Nutrition research is constantly increasing our knowledge about positive role of nutrition in disease prevention and management, and as practicing dietitians, we are able to pass the new information directly to our students, adding enormous value to their education."

La Salle is only one of 40 schools in the country to have a Coordinated Program in Dietetics. After meeting a GPA requirement, students can be admited to the program in their junior year. Instead of completing a one-year internship post graduation, students in the coordinated program complete their internship during their senior year in preperation for the dietitian exam.

Speech Language Hearing

Helping us Communicate

The goal of the Speech-Language-Hearing Science Program at La Salle University is to provide an accredited program in which students are prepared to function as qualified speech-language pathologists. The Program is designed to equip students to meet requirements for certification by the American Speech-Language-Hearing Association and for licensure by the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania. Graduates earn a Master of Science Degree. Also, the Program provides theoretical and clinical experiences that prepare students for leadership roles to meet the health, educational, and social needs of individuals with communication and swallowing disorders in the contexts of families, communities, and society.

School of Nursing Celebrates New Name & Updated

On Wednesday, March 22, 2006, faculty, staff, and alumni of La Salle's School of Nursing celebrated its recent name change to the School of Nursing and Health Sciences. The new name was conceived in order to include existing programs in Nutrition and Speech-Language-Hearing.

The ceremony was held in the Hayman Center Mezzanine and was lead by the Dean of the School of Nursing and Health Sciences, Dr. Zane Robinson Wolf. Dr. Wolf opened the ceremony by recounting a brief history of the nursing program; explaining its growth into what is now the School of Nursing and Health Sciences. Dr. Wolf remarked that the name change "symbolizes the complexity of the school and university". She went on to commend those who had a large part in the development of the program, describing her staff and advisory board as "creative and never boring".

La Salle Provost Dr. Richard A. Nigro then stressed the importance of change in the identity of the school, stating that "identities have to change, even if we don't want them to". He mentioned that a school must work on changing its curriculum before jumping to change the name of the program, and thinks La Salle succeeded in doing that.

The rest of the ceremony consisted of brief updates from the directors of each program of the School of Nursing and Health Sciences. All of the directors were proud of what their respective program had to offer, and were optimistic about the future of the school as a whole. Dr. Diane M. Wieland, director of the undergraduate nursing program remarked that "we have a lot to be proud of here at La Salle."

The program ended with closing remaks by Dr. Janice M. Beitz who kept the audience laughing with a cheer she had created about the nursing program, emphasizing its many strong points. As Mary Ellen Miller, associate director of the Public Health program declared, Wednesday night marked a "momentous occasion" for the revamped nursing program. The faculty and staff were proud of what they had already accomplished, and predicted more advances in future.

It was a great year for student activities. The Programming Center was hopping all year long, providing students bus trips, Late Night La Salle events, concerts, themed weeks/months and offering assistance to many student organizations on campus. Community Development sponsored cookouts and dinners, greek activities and leadership training. UMAS brought us a fourth service trip. Other Student Affairs departments were involved in programming as well, bringing us annual anticipated events, such as Stress Busters Week, Career Fairs, the Health Fair, and International Education Week. From Day One to Day Done, this year was jam packed with campus events.

Enjoy this section, as student organizations and some of the events they planned are highlighted.

"Since the founding, the United States has received immigrants from around the world who have found opportunity and safe haven in a new land. The labor, values, and beliefs from throughout the world have transformed the United States from a loose group of colonies into one of the leading democracies in the world today. From its founding to the present, the United States remains a nation of immigrants grounded in the firm belief that newcomers offer new energy, hope, and cultural diversity."

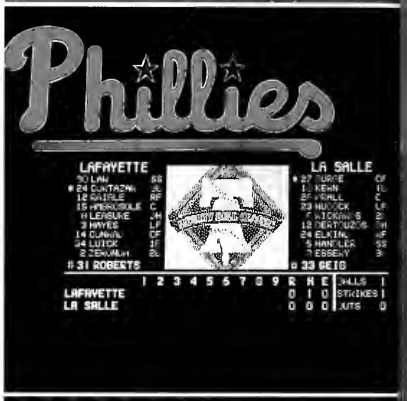
Baseball Team Wins Liberty Bell Classic

Put this in the Memory Bank



It was a night of firsts for the La Salle Explorers when they faced the Lafayette Leopards in the 15th annual Liberty Bell Classic Championship game on Tuesday, April 11, 2006. Not only was it the first appearance for both teams in the championship game, but it was also the Explorers' first opportunity to play under the lights at Citizens Bank Park.

Before the game, La Salle's outfielder/pitcher Dennis Burge spoke of another first, which was to hear the famous PA announcer Dan Baker say his name over the loudspeaker.

"It'll be really exciting and an honor," said Burge. "I've heard him announce great players playing for the Phils and Eagles and it'll be really cool to hear him announce me and my teammates' names."

While each player in uniform on both sides was able to walk away from the game with that experience, only Burge will be able to say that his game-tying double in the bottom of the ninth would help propel the Explorers to an improbable come-from behind 6-5 victory.

La Salle catcher Rich Prall went 3-5, with his third single scoring Burge with the winning run. The Explorers' bench emptied and they mobbed each other at home plate to celebrate their first Liberty Bell Classic Championship.

Designated hitter Mike Dertouzos will also never forget the night he rang the Bell at Citizens Bank Park. With La Salle down 3-0 in the bottom of the second, Dertouzos crushed a two-run homer on the first pitch he saw from Lafayette starter Steve Roberts. Dertouzos' shot easily cleared the flowerbed over the Legg Mason sign in left field, and the red white and blue lights on the Liberty Bell rang just as if Pat Burrell had answered the call. John Rickards also scored on the blast, after reaching on an error by the Leopards' shortstop Ian Law.

La Salle starter Brandon Geib struggled in the first inning, as the Leopards loaded the bases with one out. With Geib falling behind in the pitch count, that allowed the Leopards to wait for their pitches and build a 2-0 lead in the first behind three singles and a sacrifice fly. They would add another unearned run in the second, and after Dertouzos home run, added a run in both the fourth and fifth, stretching their lead to 5-2.

After two previous groundouts to second base, La Salle catcher Rich Prall hit an RBI single to right field, scoring Mike Essery to cut the deficit to two in the bottom of the fifth inning. But nothing could compare to the game-winner in the ninth.

Graduating Explorer Fans Have Reason to Cheer

For the Explorer fans that are among the class of 2006, those graduates can certainly hold their heads high. After all, what a year it was for the La Salle Men's Basketball team.

It started with the unlikely return of senior forward Steven Smith, who decided to forgo the NBA draft and return to La Salle for his final year of NCAA eligibility. Smith would again put up astounding numbers in 2005-2006, averaging 20 points and eight rebounds a game, en route to his second-straight Atlantic-10 Player of the Year award. He was honored with numerous local and national awards along with a fellow senior, guard Jermaine Thomas.

When the season commenced, the Explorers started on an incredible hot streak, winning their first seven games in a row, and garnering their first AP TOP 25 vote since 1999. The streak included a BIG 5 Classic win over Drexel on December 3rd, and a riveting December 18th four-overtime win against Central Connecticut State. The Explorers won the contest by one point, and the stunning finish (which ended on a instant replay reviewed, 3-point foul) was played over and over by ESPN's SportsCenter. The streak ended against #2 Villanova after La Salle earned the right to play in the first match up of two undefeated Big 5 teams since 1981.

One of the most memorable games of the season was the team's February 4th win over Temple. With the Tom Gola Arena sold-out for only the third time in school history, the Explorers defeated Hall-of-Famer John Cheney's squad 62-56. Not only was the arena a mad house throughout the game, but it was also La Salle's first Big 5 win since 2002.

The Explorers would go on to finish 18-10 (10-7) on the year, and end the season as the third-place team in the Atlantic-10. It was their best finish in the conference since La Salle joined in 1995. Looking ahead to the future, although the Explorers will lose Smith, Thomas, and senior center Lewis Fadipe, this year's recruiting class is one of the best in school history. Including transfers, Hoop Scoop ranks the class #19 in their Top Recruiting Classes of 2006.

While many in the La Salle class of 2006 likely won't use their blue and gold paint, or foam Explorer sword as much as they used to, all seniors can take pride in the fact that they may have been part of La Salle Basketball history. 2005-2006 may have been the year that the program returned to greatness.

WEXP Holds Raffle Fund-raiser

High Energy, High Hopes for Plevretes

The high energy at La Salle's triumphant men's home basketball game on Saturday, Feb. 18 created a perfect setting for WEXP Radio's Mike Petty to present the family of injured football player Preston Plevretes with a letter detailing the results of a fundraiser in his name. During the first time-out in the second half of the game, WEXP Assistant Director of Sports Programming, sophomore communication/history major Petty, met at half-court with Preston's father, Ted, and his younger brother, Perry, to inform them of the more than $1,000 raised.

Petty created the fundraiser for Plevretes as a sports-themed community service project for WEXP Sports. Petty said that, although he doesn't personally know Plevretes, he became close with the entire football team while covering its games for WEXP and the Collegian. He came up with the idea to raffle off prize baskets to raise money for Plevretes' family.

Plevretes suffered severe brain injuries resulting from a hit during La Salle's Nov. 5 football game against Duquesne University. He underwent surgery to relieve pressure and blood on his brain at Mercy Hospital in Pittsburgh. He has since been treated at the Kessler Institute for Rehabilitation, Morristown Memorial Hospital and JFK Johnson Rehabilitation Institute, all located in New Jersey. Plevretes is now staying at the Children's Specialized Hospital, the largest pediatric rehabilitative center in the United States, also located in New Jersey. The Children's Specialized Hospital offers an impatient Brain Injury Program for patients from infancy to 21 years.

Petty asked sponsors to donate goods for the raffle so that all of the proceeds could go directly to Plevretes' family. WEXP sent letters and made calls to fans, parents, local businesses and college & professional sports teams. Petty said the response was "extremely quick" and "very gracious."

Items collected were divided into four themed baskets: an Autograph Basket, which included a football signed by the 2006 Super Bowl champions, the Pittsburgh Steelers; an Entertainment Basket, which included a dinner cruise for two on the Spirit of Philadelphia; a School Spirit Basket, which included a camera and blue fleece blanket; and a Sports Fan Basket, which included 24 tickets to six different teams' games.

WEXP sold raffle tickets on campus and at men's and women's home basketball games. The winners were selected after the men's basketball game against St. Bonaventure on Feb. 15.

"For most of us who have been looking to help out in any way possible, it was a great idea not only to raise money, but to let Preston and his family know that his friends and peers have not forgotten about him and will continue to pray for his recovery," said sophomore Mike Rose, who won the School Spirit basket.

Former football head coach Ph Longo regularly visits Plevretes an sends e-mails to over 140 faculty students and staff who have requeste to receive updates on his conditio He said that Plevretes works regularl with physical, occupational an speech therapists and a psychiatri specialist. Longo notified th Plevretes family about the WEX fundraiser and invited them t Saturday's basketball game. Te Plevretes said that they plan "to us the money to open an account fo Preston to use when he's better Perry Plevretes, a senior in hig school, said that he will be enrolled La Salle next year.

Petty said that the Plevretes wi receive their check soon. He is happ with the results of the fundraiser.

"I am so proud of all of our donor students, La Salle staff, and especial the members of WEXP Sports. Yo could tell that [Preston's] family w sincerely happy. They've bee through so much, it felt great to d something nice for them."

A Senior Sendoff to Remember

Three Men's Basketball Players Graduate

This year, the La Salle Explorers say goodbye to three memorable men who will be spoken about for many years to come as the building blocks of the Men's Basketball resurgence. The three seniors, Lewis Fadipe, Jermaine Thomas, and Steven Smith, have seen the program suffer through losing seasons, coaching changes, and scandals, but were finally able to taste a winning season this past year. Their perseverance has helped the Explorer program turn around from a national punch-line into a budding force to be reckoned with.

When Fadipe, the 6-10' Center originally from Lagos, Nigeria, came to La Salle it was unknown whether he would be able to develop the skills necessary to play at the Division 1 level. After recooperating from a freshman year injury, Fadipe saw his role with the Explorers grow with each passing year. This year, he started all but two games and was the team leader in shots blocked, with 34. Perhaps his most memorable moment as an Explorer came in the 2004-2005 season, when he blocked 2 consecutive shots in the last 10 seconds of an overtime game against Xavier, securing an upset victory over the visiting Musketeers. His best game this season came on November 30, as he scored 9 points, had 9 rebounds and 5 blocks in the Explorers victory over Mt. Saint Mary's. Known for his hard style of play and fierce determination, Fadipe will certainly be missed by Explorer fans.

For four years, Jermaine Thomas has been overlooked by those who follow Atlantic 10 basketball casually. To the astute observer, however, it is clear Thomas is a unique player, who usually has a big part of Explorer success. Thomas' breakout year was 2004-2005, when he played with a torn ligament on his left hand. Playing through the pain, Thomas carried a weary team to the end. In the Atlantic 10 Tournament upset against UMass, Thomas scored 18 points. This season, he was the Explorers 3rd leading scorer with 12.3 points per game as well as the team leader in assists and steals. He scored 20 points in a win over Duquesne. He sat for only three minutes against Central Connecticut State in a game that went into 4 Overtimes. In his 4 years at La Salle. he has been a quiet leader, a deadly shooter, and an overall class act.

Steven Smith's La Salle story can only be summarized, never fully understood, unless you saw him play. Lightly recruited out of High School, Smith came to La Salle as an academic redshirt. In his freshman and sophomore years he became a force to be reckoned with in the Atlantic 10, despite being on losing squads. During the tumultuous summer of 2004, Smith stayed at La Salle and his patience was rewarded with an Atlantic 10 Player of the Year. Surprising to many, Smith returned to 20th & Olney for the 2005-2006 season, putting off his professional career. He once again repeated as Atlantic 10 Player of the Year, and was largely responsible for putting an end to La Salle's decade long losing streak. He scored a career high 41 points in the 4 Overtime game against Central Connecticut State, playing all but 1 minute in the Explorers eventual triumph. In his final game at Tom Gola Arena, he turned in one of his finest performances, scoring 26 points and grabbing 16 rebounds while committing no turnovers in the win over the St. Louis Billikens. He leaves La Salle 7th in all time points scored and 5th in all time rebounds. But most of all, Steven Smith restored pride in the program and gave people something to cheer about when it came to Explorer basketball.

Senior: "being in a position, rank, or grade above others of the same set or class; of or relating to senior citizens. Usage Note = old."

Congratulations Class of '06, the dictionary just called us old. And in reality we are old. We have just completed another benchmark in our lives. First it was kindergarten, then grade school and most recently high school graduation, all of these important steps in life. Speaking of old, think of all the things we can say we have seen. We saw the turn of the Milennium, a robot land on Mars, and the rise of MTV. Just imagine how strange it would be if we still lived in the era we were born into; gas would still be under a dollar, we would still be in the Cold War, and none of us would have ever watched "Friends". So when people call us old do not take it as an insult, take it as a compliment. Remember everything we have lived for and everything we will live for. Also remember when people call us old, we are really not that old, we still have so much life to live. We have so many more benchmarks to pass and so many things to see - maybe gas will be over 10 dollars!

SENIORS

In Memoriam

In November 2005, the University experienced the tragedy of losing a bright, young member in the Lasallian community. Danielle Leonard, a senior Accounting major who is best known for being passionate, smart, giving and unique will forever be missed. The loss hit campus hard since many members of the community had the opportunity of knowing the twenty-one year old.

Leonard grew up in Media, PA with her parents, two older brothers and a younger sister. Following in the footsteps of her father, Tom, '70 and two brothers, Tom Jr., '96 and Ryan, '00, Leonard decided to attend La Salle as well. After one year as a Communication major, Leonard switched to Accounting, where she uncovered her strong abilities and found her niche.

Accounting came naturally to Leonard. According to Paul R. Brazina, Interim Dean of the School of Business, "She was unusually talented in Auditing, and in many instances, her essays exceeded my most optimistic solutions."

Leonard interned last summer at PricewaterhouseCoopers LLP and already had been offered a full-time position there after graduation. She received the Accounting Faculty Award at the end of her sophomore year and the Jack Keen Memorial Scholarship at the end of her junior year. In April 2006, Leonard was posthumously inducted into Beta Gamma Sigma.

Although Leonard will be deeply missed, friends and family will remember her through the loving, fun, and caring memories that remain. Leonard's parents are starting a scholarship fund in her name here at La Salle University.

Another Lost Lasallian

Eduardo Cangiano

It was late April in his senior year at Hudson Catholic High School when Eduardo Cangiano made the decision that La Salle University was in his future. It seems that he wanted to continue the Lasallian education that had so contributed to his development. He joined the Freshman Class of 2002 at La Salle in grand style, making many friends in St. Katherine Residence Hall and in his School of Business classes. Sadly, he passed away in the Spring Semester of his sophomore year. He continues to be missed by his family and the many friends he made, both at Hudson Catholic and here at La Salle.

Our Lasallian Community was also touched by the passing of these loved ones

From In Memoriam by Lord Alfred Tennyson

Ring out, wild bells, to the wild sky,
The flying cloud, the frosty light:
The year is dying in the night;
Ring out, wild bells, and let him die.

Ring out the old, ring in the new,
Ring, happy bells, across the snow:
The year is going, let him go;
Ring out the false, ring in the true.

Ring out the grief that saps the mind
For those that here we see no more;
Ring out the feud of rich and poor,
Ring in redress to all mankind.

Ring out a slowly dying cause,
And ancient forms of party strife;
Ring in the nobler modes of life,
With sweeter manners, purer laws.

Ring out the want, the care, the sin,
The faithless coldness of the times;
Ring out, ring out my mournful rhymes
But ring the fuller minstrel in.

Ring out false pride in place and blood,
The civic slander and the spite;
Ring in the love of truth and right,
Ring in the common love of good.

Ring out old shapes of foul disease;
Ring out the narrowing lust of gold;
Ring out the thousand wars of old,
Ring in the thousand years of peace.

Ring in the valiant man and free,
The larger heart, the kindlier hand;
Ring out the darkness of the land,
Ring in the Christ that is to be.

Places We'll Remember

"We'll remember Thursday nights in the townhouses - A & B block. We always hung out together. Everyone was out every night."

Kerry Finnegan, 06
Courtneay Cipolone, 06

"My favorite place in Philadelphia...? Castle Roxx in Manayunk, the only way a La Salle student knows how to start the week off... inexpensive drinks and 20 cent wings."

Michael Antonelli, 06

"A favorite campus place of mine was behind the Peale House. A friend and I would sit there sometimes and just watch the lights from the cars through the trees. That place is seriously a hidden treasure, to use a cliché. You can get away from computers, roommates and loud parties for a while and just relax."

Gwen Tuxbury, 06

Cory Anotado, '09

My favorite spot on campus s the Commuter Lounge, in the basement of the Union. 'o most, it's nothing special, ut to me as a commuter, it's one of the funniest, most honest, and best places to hang out on campus."

Elizabeth Cerkez '09

"My favorite place at La Salle is the yellow tables outside of the Union. It's a cool place to relax and hang out with friends or study. It's a nice central location."

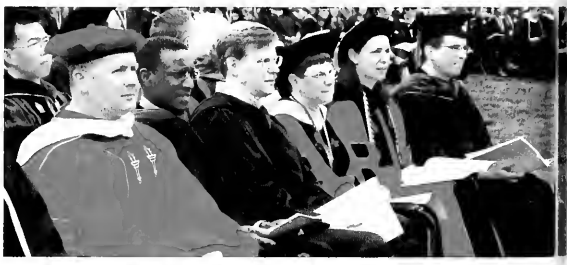
Sam Fran Scavuzzo '09

"My favorite place on campus is the ivy arches between the tennis courts. It makes me forget I'm in the city sometimes."

Laura Hopkins '09

"My favorite place on campus so far is the balcony in Olney hall; it is very quiet there during classes and you can just relax and stretch your legs while doing your work. Also, you can just look over and see who is coming in the front doors of the building."

Faces We'll Never Forget



"Mrs. Emery was our favorite teacher because she was flexible with our lacrosse schedule and she is just a very intelligent woman and is a great educator. She is personable, organized, and knows her stuff!"

Kelly Cochlin '06
Kristen Davis '06

"Becky Messa and Louise Guilano were the two most influential people in my college experience. They created an open, accepting and educational environment in the UMAS office that helped me grow as a person throughout my four years at LaSalle."

Joanne Brennan '06

"We loved La Salle because all the faculty and staff were personable and helpful. La Salle is one big family."

Katie Lantz '06
Nik Kozel '06

Christina Cloud '06

"Dr. Nancy Jones, Dr. William Weaver and Marsha Timmerman are the three most influential people I have ever met; their commitment, passion and overall dedication towards educating others is the driving force behind the Integrated Science Business and Technology major."

Gwen Tuxbury '06

"I'll most remember Brother Emery Mollenhauer. I think he gets a bad reputation for being really strict or intimidating, but I found him hilarious and extremely kind. He knows so much about poets and the history behind them; I learned a lot from his classes."

Anna Roberts '06

"Dawn Fraser is a wonderful person to work with. She is a very hard worker and a pleasure to be around. She cares about the students and what they want."

Commencement Year Team

Senior year is filled with many mixed emotions: excitement, fear, happiness, sadness, and optimism.

The Commencement Year Team in the Division of Student Affairs is charged with creating social and educational programming for graduating students. The members of the Commencement Year Team are staff members from the various units in the Division of Student Affairs and some student members.

Students participate in the 100 Days To Go Dinner. Planned at a time when the students have 100 days until their graduation, the dinner is a semi-formal event that includes a sit-down meal, a slideshow presenting the memories of students, and DJ entertainment. The dinner is significant because the students begin to realize they are about to make a transition in their lives.

Commencement Week is the week between final exams and graduation. Traditionally, Commencement Week provides our students the opportunity to engage in various social activities geared to celebrate our students' educational journey. Throughout the week, events are planned on- and off-campus; and guided by University Life, Community Development, Administrative Services, the Office of University Advancement, and the Alumni Association.

The Commencement Year Team works to enhance a relationship between the senior students and the university community. Students are encouraged to continue their relationship with La Salle after they graduate. The Office of Advancement and the Alumni Association co-sponsor events during Commencement Week and a portion of the ticket sales for Commencement Week contribute to the Senior Gift.

The programming for Commencement Week includes opportunities for students which are purposefully and intentionally focused to guide students through their last undergraduate experience at the University. In light of this goal, the Commencement Year Team also creates a continuum of programs and events through out the year to enhance the Commencement Year Experience.

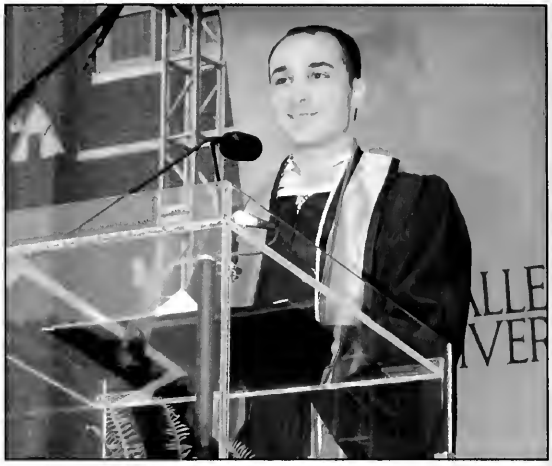
Student Commencement Speaker Ben Rosehart



We have all gathered here today for a reason. Today is about reflection on the past, appreciation and admiration of the present, and hope and excitement for the future. Today is about our accomplishments, our choices, and our dreams. Today is about those people we hold close to our hearts, the people who have helped inspire us to develop the passion for what we believe in, and the people that have helped us progress on the path of our life's journey. Today is about La Salle and all of us.

We each have our own definition of what La Salle means to us. But I am certain that we can all relate to the following: When anyone asks what makes La Salle special, almost always the first answer you hear is the same: the people.

We heard this when we visited La Salle as high school students, or when we came for Day One or when we transferred to La Salle. We heard this when we signed up for graduate classes, or when we were first introduced to our professors, or when the eyes of an alum lit up at the thought of us also attending La Salle. And during our time at La Salle, we have realized that what they told us was right... that what makes La Salle special is in fact, the people.

So I ask: who are the people at La Salle that mean the most to us? Think of your best friends and roommates, classmates and co-workers. Think of your professors, coaches, and mentors. Think of the people you stayed up late at night with cramming and sometimes procrastinating for exams; the people you spent time with discussing and comparing ideas, beliefs, and backgrounds. Think of the moments that challenged you and were most painful for you, and how you got through those tough times. Who helped you, who listened to your problems, and who threw aside whatever was on their lap, to be there for you?

Now when we were just starting out on our La Salle training wheels...another common phrase we heard was "get involved." We did this in several ways, to varying degrees. We grew into leadership roles, we brought new ideas to light and we breathed new life into causes we felt strongly about. We helped run events for the surrounding community, we raised awareness as well as charity donations, and we helped bridge gaps between cultures, schools and time zones. We brought people together for common goals. Together, we learned what we are passionate about, what others are passionate about, and how to share our passion with others.

So I ask: what are we passionate about? We are all passionate for certain causes, for a number of reasons. Passion gives you purpose, helps you validate why you act the way you do, makes you explain why you stand for something when others disagree. Passion gnaws at you when you feel the most popular choice is not the best choice...and it encourages you to ask the impertinent question because you believe it will bring growth and progress. You cannot do anything meaningful unless you have passion.

Getting involved is not just advice that should be solely for your time here at La Salle. In your future endeavors, I urge you to get involved. At the same time, don't forget where your passion started and grew. Like the Explorers for Life that have come before us, we have been changed forever by our time here at La Salle. And so, think of the Explorers that will follow after us. And for them remember La Salle, not just through donations, but also in other ways such as giving back time and advice to future Explorers and the community. By doing this, you can continue to be involved at La Salle, in ways you won't even begin to realize.

But please, follow your passion.

La Salle has changed us in more ways then we even realize. From learning new ideas in and outside of the classroom, to spending time with people from numerous backgrounds, our memories here at La Salle will always be a part of who we are and who we will become. Our paths have led us to La Salle and to the people we were meant to meet and to develop the dreams we hold deep in our minds and hearts. We have grown as individuals and we have in turn helped the La Salle community grow together.

As we continue to reflect on our time here at La Salle, and as we share mixed emotions of excitement and caution of what lies ahead, I encourage us to please thank the people that love us, thank the people that mean the most to us, and thank the people that have inspired us and challenged us to grow...the people we have lived with, worked with, sat in class with, learned from and with. Treasure them. Remember these people. And also remember that La Salle will always serve as a reminder of how passionate people working together can achieve progress.

May God bless us on this day and forever. Thank you.

Excerpts from Ben Rosehart's speech

Honorary Degree Recipients

Buntzie Ellis Churchill
World Affairs Council of Philadelphia

Philosophy Professor Cornelia Tsakiridou presented Buntzie Ellis Churchill with an honorary degree in recognition of her accomplishments and dedication to service. During the presentation, Professor Tsakiridou said, "Ms. Churchill's passion to make Philadelphia known to the world has been made both evident and effective. She has helped Philadelphia become a player on the world stage. In the course of this effort, what's most impressive is her ability to relate equally well with world leaders and inner city students."

First introduced to the World Affairs Council while a student at Philadelphia High School for Girls, Churchill was inspired by the work of the organization. So inspired, she enrolled in the University of Pennsylvania to major in international relations.

Churchill has worked for the World Affairs Council since 1964, when she joined the organization as Director of Student and Teacher Programs. She was elected President in 1983 and, during her tenure, Churchill has established the Council as one of the most prestigious and respected organizations in the area.

Established in 1949, the World Affairs Council of Philadelphia is recognized as one of the top public policy forums in the country. It fulfills its mission of creating an informed citizenry on matters of national and international significance through speaker events, educational outreach in schools, and travel programs.

Recognized with numerous honors and awards for her commitment to the community, Churchill is a member of the Union League, Sunday Breakfast Club, the Athenaeum, and Drexel University's Board of Trustees.

Timothy O'Toole, '77
Managing Director of the London Underground

Timothy O'Toole, '77 became Managing Director of the London Underground, or the "Tube" as many know it, in 2003. The public transit system is responsible for transporting 3 million passengers daily. In his second year on the job, the Tube set an all-time record for passenger and service volume and posted the highest-ever passenger satisfaction scores. His leadership in the coordination and the evacuation of passengers and station staff in the aftermath of terrorist attacks in July 2005 earned him accalades from the British government, media and the public at large.

"The Queen has made (Mr. O'Toole) an honorary commander of the Most Excellent Order of the British Empire, and one media outlet declared him the second most important person in London—his boss; the mayor was first," said Brother Gerard Molyneaux, who presented Mr. O'Toole with his honor. "I think La Salle can proudly join both the Queen and the London media in recognizing the outstanding leadership and inspirational courage of Tim O'Toole."

Before moving to England, O'Toole held several management positions at Consolidated Rail Corporation (Conrail) in Philadelphia. He retired as President and Chief Executive Officer after the Conrail was sold. After that, he became Chairman of a capital campaign for the Support Center of Child Advocates, a pro bono effort that represents abused children in the courts, and Finance Chairman for the Metropolitan Area YMCA of Philadelphia.

O'Toole graduated maxima cum laude from La Salle in 1977, with a degree in English Literature. In his acceptance speech, he said he often reflected on his education at La Salle and his English Literature degree and where it took him in his life.

Christina M. Jones

Andrea, another four years have past and you did it! You're a LaSalle graduate! You are our light, our hope, our pride, and our first to graduate a four year university. Congratulations!

We knew from an early age that you had high expectations for yourself. You have always strived for perfection and excellence. Such devotion will be your beacon and will guide you on your journey through life. When you're climbing mountains, and boulders in your way threaten to slow you down, remember to focus, breathe, and most of all don't give up. Because when you reach the top you will soar like a bird!

Our role as your parents continues to subside as you become more self assured and independent. We want you to know that no matter how dim our light becomes in your travels; the light in our hearts will forever shine to guide you. We will be your lighthouse in the storm. Andrea, you are a beautiful, confident, intelligent, young WOMAN! We are honored to be your parents, delighted to share in your journey, and proud to have been part of your evolution from a teenager to a woman and now a LaSalle graduate.
In the immortal words of Dr.Saess, "Oh the places you'll go. Your on your way."
Love, Mom, Dad, Candice, Carmella,& Bubba

Andrea, while I have known you for many years now, I never could have imagined that we could share so many memories and good times together. You have given me love that I will never forget and I hope I can continue to do the same for you. Congratulations on your accomplishments. When I look into your future it's so bright that it burns my eye.
Love Gordon

One of our greatest pleasures has been watching you grow
From a tiny tot to the young man we know.
You're witty and handsome with brown eyes, too;
All the girls flirt with you!

Get down to it and set the world on fire!
Good luck, success and happy days;
May God bless you in many ways.

Love and warmest wishes,
Nana and Pop-Pop

Our little boy has grown to become a young man on his way to a successful career! Good luck to a cool dude!
Love you, Pops

Congratulations, Paul! I wish you success and joy!

It seems like only yesterday you were starting kindergarten. Now you're graduating from college! I'm sure that the road that you have traveled wasn't always easy and I know that your assignments may have also been hard. But now look at what you have accomplished in the past four years... you have worked very hard to achieve your degree. Job Well Done!! God has blessed you tremendously. I just want you to know that I love you very much and I am so very proud of you. I know that you will be successful at all that you do. Congratulations!

Love Always, Your Mom & your brother Kareem

Congrats on doing what we knew you would. Now go be the best nurse out there, because you're already the best woman any man could have in his life.

Muffin, you have conquered another stepping stone in life. Continue to move forward & keep smiling. I'm very proud of you.

God Bless, Aunt Carrie

Know ye that the Lord he is God: it is he that hath made us, and not ourselves; we are his people, and the sheep of his pasture. (Psalms 100:3)

Dearest Sadiqa, Your diligence and determination have truly been an inspiration to us all. May you continue to receive your life blessing with such grace and fortitude. God Bless and Keep You.

Love, Aunt Linda, Uncle Jim and Little Willie

Congratulations! We are both proud of you and know how happy you are to finally reach this point. You didn't let anything or anyone stop you and you succeeded. This is just the beginning of many more successes to come. Happy graduation and we love you...

Raheem and Narissa

With heartfelt joy and pride, I write this congratulatory message. I've watched you as you have prepared for this day. I take pride in sharing with you one of my greatest blessings in Branden Jr. and in your achievement. This will strengthen his life now; put your hard work and caring nature to work in the heath profession! Trust in the Lord with all your heart, and lean not until you own understanding in all your ways. Acknowledge him, and he will direct your path. Once again, congratulations!

Love you, Ms. Michelle

Just think if you had just played it safe, you would never have accomplished such a thing as graduating from college. See what a little risk taking and sacrifices can get you... Congratulations and I wish you great good luck in all that you do.

Your Cousin Jason Canady Class of '05'

You are a phenomenal young woman who knows what she wants and how to go about getting it. Please write a book and please call it, "Determined". Thank you for allowing me to know you.

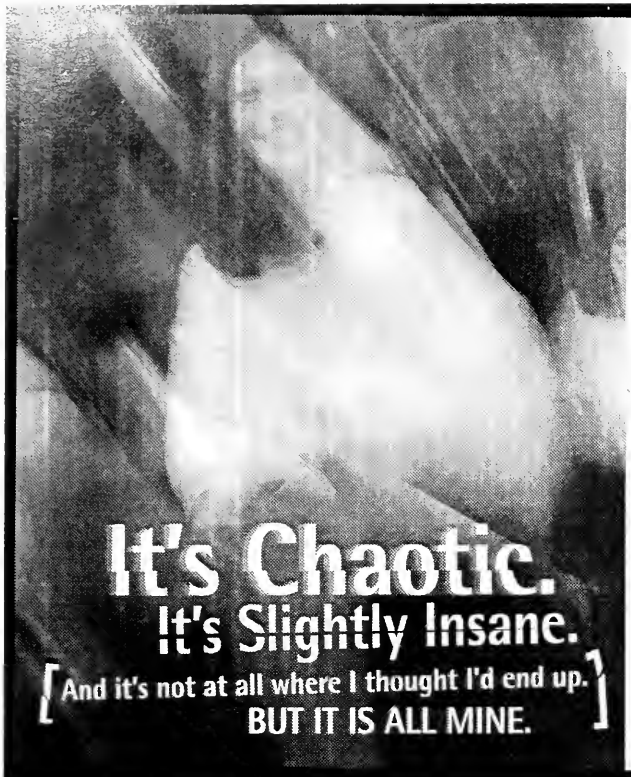
DIVISION OF STUDENT AFFAIRS



I always saw myself working in an office. But it turned out I like thinking on my feet, doing ten things at once. I like managing a balance sheet impacting a $8.2 billion company. And I definitely like the potential to advance further than my friends climbing the corporate ladder.

It's a little surprising how much I enjoy it. But Enterprise is a surprising place. They train me. Support me. Reward me when I perform. Yet they let me do it my way, and I've never learned so much in my life.

Katie,

Can you believe four years have gone by so quickly? It seems like only last week we were dropping you off at your freshman dorm. Remember how the football team attacked our car, emptied it in 30 seconds and had all your stuff in the room before I could park the car? We set up your room, said our goodbyes and you were off and running!

You flourished at school. You have worked so hard, and you have done so well. Look at your accomplishments over the past short, four years. You have become a strong, independent person who is ready to take on the world.

We are so proud of you and what you have achieved. Congratulations on your graduation. Now go out into the world and make a difference.

Dad and Mom

We love you Katie
